On 11 June 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 2,905,325.

Charitable Housing Associations (Tenants)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he is satisfied with the working of the Housing Corporation's home scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans his Department has for the future of the Housing Corporation's home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether his Department intends to consult the Housing Corporation over the working of its home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations.

Mr. Waldegrave: The home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations was introduced in September 1984 to help tenants who were excluded from the right to buy. It has proved popular, but demand outstrips the resources available. I shall keep the operation and effectiveness of the scheme under review in consultation with the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when his Department last provided additional funds for the Housing Corporation's home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations; and how much was provided;

(2) whether he intends to provide additional funds during the current financial year for the Housing Corporation's home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations.

Mr. Waldegrave: The funding of transferable discounts under the home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations has to be accommodated within the Housing Corporation's cash-limited approved development programme. In 1986-87 expenditure on the scheme amounted to £17·58 million; a further £19 million has been allocated for the current financial year.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new home owners are estimated to have been assisted by the Housing Corporation's home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations; and how many are now on the waiting list.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since the scheme was introduced in September 1984, approximately 4,300 properties have been purchased. Over 1,100 applications have been made since the current waiting list was started on 1 October 1986.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to seek to amend the way in which the Housing Corporation's home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations operates to take greater account of regional differences.

Mr. Waldegrave: The scheme already takes account of regional variations in house prices, and the Housing Corporation allocates funds to its regions on the basis of local demand for the scheme.

Improvement Grants

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to announce modifications to the improvement grant procedure following the consultation he carried out with the publication of the Green Paper, "Home Improvement—New Approach".

Mr. Waldegrave: Shortly.

Flags

Mr. Robert Sheldon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of the new flags of the United Kingdom currently flying over the Treasury.

Mr. Chope: The 11 United Kingdom flags currently flying above the Treasury have been provided from existing stock and are not new. Their approximate replacement cost is £1,400.

Spectrum Arena

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much is due to the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation from the former lessees of the Spectrum arena, the Birchwood project.

Mrs. Roe: The outstanding debt was extinguished on the surrender of the lease.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if any specific proposals have yet been made by the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation to his Department about the amount and nature of investment in new facilities at Birchwood.

Mrs. Roe: The development corporation has sought the Department's approval for the construction of an indoor tennis centre at Birchwood and to its disposal on concessionary terms to the borough council. These proposals are being considered.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the losses involved in the operation of the Spectrum arena.

Mrs. Roe: The losses of the Birchwood Project (Warrington) Ltd. and its subsidiary the Birchwood Project Trading Company Ltd. are set out in the companies' accounts which are open to inspection under the Companies Acts.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if there have been any discussions between Warrington borough council and the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation concerning the sale of the Spectrum arena; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Discussions took place before the closure of the Spectrum arena last year.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation proposes to consult Warrington borough council over the future of the Spectrum arena.

Mrs. Roe: Yes.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider an increase in the rate support grant to Warrington borough council to assist in financing the purchase of the Spectrum arena; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Local authorities' need to spend on recreation facilities and on the financing of capital expenditure is already recognised in assessments of their grant-related expenditure, which is a major factor in determining their entitlement to block grant.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider a transfer of other assets from Warrington and Runcorn development corporation to Warrington borough council to offset any of the costs incurred by Warrington borough council in running the Spectrum arena; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: The development corporation has submitted no such proposal to the Department.

St. George's Hospital

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how long the St. George's hospital building, Hyde park corner, has been unoccupied; what initiatives he will take to ensure this grade II building is adequately protected from any further deterioration which might necessitate its demolition; and what further initiatives he will take to ensure this building will be restored to its original design.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall answer this question shortly.

Rental Purchase

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if his Department currently gives any funding or financial subsidies to companies involved in rental purchase schemes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent representations he has received regarding Bradford Investments plc; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what recent representations he has received regarding rental purchase schemes; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what is his Department's policy with regard to rental purchase schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: This Department does not currently give any financial assistance to rental purchase schemes. Representations have recently been received from one local authority and from Shelter on rental purchase schemes in general and Bradford Investment plc in particular. The Housing Act 1980 extended to occupiers under rental purchase agreements certain rights under the Protection from Eviction Act 1977. The Government are keeping the use of rental purchase under review.

Thamesmead

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a full and detailed account of the terms of the sale of Thamesmead to Thamesmead Town Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) on 20 July.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has exercised his rights to nominate tenants to accommodation at Thamesmead; and what will happen to his nomination rights if Thamesmead is sold to Thamesmead Town Ltd.

Mrs. Roe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has been content to leave the London area mobility scheme to agree suitable arrangements with the London residuary body and Thamesmead town while Thamesmead has been vested in the LRB. When Thamesmead is transferred to Thamesmead town his nomination rights will cease. Thamesmead town has, however, undertaken to make some vacancies available to the scheme.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total cost of providing chauffeured cars for Ministers in each of the past five financial years; and if he will break down the total according to Department.

Mr. Chope: Costs for the years 1982-83 to 1985-86 were provided on 23 February 1987 at column 95. Costs in 1986-87 were £2,450,000. Breaking these down between Departments would involve disproportionate cost.

Housing and Planning

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when section 6 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 will come into effect; why its commencement has been delayed; why he commenced section 9 of the Act before section 6; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Section 6, which concerns consultation before the disposal of housing subject to secure tenancies, is unconnected with section 9, which relates to redevelopment and disposal with vacant possession. It is planned to bring section 6 into force at the same time as section 8, which concerns the preservation of the right to buy, when regulations relevant to that section are ready to be made. They are currently in draft.

Albert Memorial

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the likely cost of restoring the Albert memorial; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall answer this question shortly.

Local Authorities (Professional Services)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking the inclusion of professional services including architectural and engineering services within the ambit of those services for which local authorities will have to seek tenders within the terms of the Local Government Act.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 20 July 1987]: The Department has received several representations arguing for the inclusion of further services in the list of those subject to compulsory competition.

There has been one formal representation about the inclusion of professional services since the Bill was published.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Accounts (Publication)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide the latest details of the current average length of time between the receipt of annual accounts by companies registration office and their publication, listed separately for April, May and June.

Mr. Maude: In recent months, days have been lost due to industrial action and an accompanying overtime ban. The Registrar of Companies estimates that the average time between the receipt of batches of annual accounts and returns and their publication at the end of April, May and June this year was around five weeks, six weeks and seven weeks respectively.

The registrar greatly regrets this lengthening of the time taken to place documents on the public record: he accords high priority to the reduction of the accumulated arrears as quickly as possible.

Net Book Agreements

Mr. Butler asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what extent his Department's competition division monitors the operation of the net book agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976 and the Resale Prices Act 1976 provide the current legal framework within which arrangements such as the net book agreement may be considered in the light of the public interest. Judgments as to the public interest in such cases are a matter for the Restrictive Practices Court. As stated in my reply to the hon. Member on 15 July 1987, at columns 483-84, an application to the court to review its 1962 judgment in respect of the net book agreement may be made by the Director General of Fair Trading. There is no provision for the Secretary of State to make such an application.

It is therefore for the Director General to determine whether the conditions for an application to the court in respect of the net book agreement are met and in these circumstances the operation of the agreement is not monitored by my Department.

Textiles (Labelling)

Mr. Madden asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from the West Yorkshire trading standards joint committee concerning false labelling on textiles with particular regard to the overstatement of wool content in garments; what further action he is planning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have recently received a letter from the West Yorkshire trading standards joint committee on this matter. This is currently receiving attention.

The European Commission is currently investigating the situation and I understand that the Commission is expected to make known its findings in October.

Radio Navigator Receivers

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the supply of marine radio navigation receivers compatible with the Decca navigator system is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The report is published today.

The Commission found that a monopoly situation existed in favour of several subsidiary companies of the Racal Group in the supply in the United Kingdom of marine radio navigation receivers compatible with the Decca navigator system but concluded that this did not operate against the public interest.

At the time the reference was made, the DNS transmitters were operated and financed by Racal. Complaints had been made about some of Racal's practices, particularly those directed against the supply of competitors' receivers whose manufacture Racal had not licensed. Racal explained these practices as being necessary in the past in order to generate and safeguard the income needed for it to meet the operating costs of DNS transmitters. However, as a result of a contract concluded in February this year with the general lighthouse authorities Racal, while still owning the DNS transmitters in the United Kingdom, will operate them under the superintendence of the GLAs and as a charge to the general lighthouse fund, which will provide the necessary income. Racal assured the commission that following this agreement it had abandoned the practices complained of and that there was now total freedom as to the use made of DNS signals. The commission was, however, critical of Racal's having made certain changes to DNS transmissions in the past which might have compromised safety at sea. The commission therefore made two suggestions about authorising future changes to the DNS transmissions and instituting type approval for all DNS receivers.

I accept the findings of the commission's report. Because the commission found that the monopoly situation under reference did not operate against the public interest, there is no statutory basis on which to take further action. I shall, however, be drawing the commission's suggestions on authorisation of future changes to DNS transmissions and introduction of type approval for all DNS receivers to the attention of my ministerial colleagues at the Department of Transport.

Consumer Protection Act 1987

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the provisions of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 will be brought into effect.

Mr. Maude: My noble Friend intends to make a commencement order under section 50(2) of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 to bring into force on 1 October 1987 part II together with its related provisions in parts IV and V and schedules 2, 4 and 5. Section 10 in part II creates the general safety requirement, which requires consumer goods to be reasonably safe.

The same commencement order will bring the product liability provisions into effect on 1 March 1988 (part I and schedule 1, together with the related provisions of part V and schedules 4 and 5). Businesses will need rather more time to prepare themselves for the changes to product liability and therefore sufficient time has been allowed for this purpose. However, my Department will be consulting interested parties urgently about the dates of implementation.

A guidance leaflet for manufacturers will be published explaining the way in which the safety provisions of the Act will work. Regulations ancillary to the general safety requirement will be laid at the appropriate time.

On misleading prices (part III of the Act) we expect to consult interested parties on a revised draft of the code of practice and any draft regulations in the autumn.

It is presently envisaged that section 36 and schedule 3, which makes amendments to the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, will be brought into force on 1 March 1988.

Textiles (Statistics)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will publish as a table in the Official Report the United Kingdom imports and exports of textiles and clothing from and to (a) other individual European Community countries, (b) the rest of the world and (c) the European Community for each year since 1970;

(2) what are the figures for imports and exports of textiles and clothing between the United Kingdom and separately, the European Community and the rest of the world in real terms for each year since 1975.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 16 July 1987, c. 583]: The information is in the following tables. Information in real terms is not available.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency Policy

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the energy efficiency policy proposals for 1987 submitted to the Energy Select Committee by his predecessor remain his policy.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is important that energy is used efficiently. I am currently reviewing with my right hon. Friend how this can best be done.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Universities (Medical Education)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in the light of Sir John Burnett's public statement at the Edinburgh university convention on Saturday 18 July, a copy of which has been sent to him, he is satisfied with the provision of medical education in British universities over the last 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: I have read Sir John's remarks with interest. The Government, in their joint note of guidance on medical education to universities and health authorities, have asked the University Grants Committee to give careful consideration to the level of funding it provides for medical education and to the guidance it gives to institutions. The UGC has impressed upon universities the need for decisions about clinical academic posts to be the subject of close consultation with the relevant health authorities. The Government are also examining the arrangements for co-ordination and co-operation among the relevant Departments at national level and the responses received to the recommendations on this matter by the Croham committee ("Review of the University Grants Committee", Cm. 81).

Non-advanced Further Education

Mr. Robert G. Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the report of the joint efficiency study of non-advanced further education will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The report, which is entitled "Managing Colleges Efficiently", is published today.

It recommends a number of measures which LEAs and further education colleges should take so as to manage their resources more efficiently and effectively. It is the outcome of a joint study undertaken by the DES, the WOED and the local authority associations, and we intend to build on that partnership so as to ensure that the report's challenging recommendations are implemented.

Sports Facilities

Mr. Mans asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has yet received the report from the study of the dual use of school sports facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: This study which has now been completed confirms first that there is scope for expanding the dual use of school sports facilities. Secondly it makes recommendations for improved accounting, management and marketing for dual use. We shall now be working towards the publication of practical advice arising from this study. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions

Mr. Curry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science who will be the members of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The membership of the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions is as follows:

Chairman

Lord Chilver FRS:—
Vice-Chancellor of Cranfield Institute of Technology.

Members

Dr. Peter Andrews CBE:—
GCSE Co-ordinator for Derbyshire, former head of a comprehensive school in Derbyshire.

Mr. Geoffrey Armstrong:—
Director of Metal Box PLC.

Mr. Ray Carter:—
Director of Marathon Oil (UK) Ltd., and Former Labour Member of Parliament for Birmingham, Northfield.

Mrs. Judith Chaplin:—
Head of policy unit, Institute of Directors and former Chairman of Norfolk County Council Education Committee.

Mr. Ken Graham CBE:—
Recently retired Deputy General Secretary of the Trades Union Congress.

Dr. Anne Hogg:—
Consultant and member of the Doctors and Dentists Review Body.

Mrs. Rosemary White:—
Just retiring as head of a primary school in Cardiff.

The committee's first main task will be to advise on the April 1988 pay settlement for school teachers in England and Wales in accordance with the Teachers' Pay and Conditions Act 1987.

Universities (Grants)

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list grants made available to universities in Great Britain in the financial year 1986-87, on the advice of the University Grants Committee and the Computer Board.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is as follows:

Information Technology

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to advance the use of information technology in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have developed a new and comprehensive strategy on IT in schools which will take us into the 1990s and beyond. Details are set out in a letter to chief education officers, which was issued yesterday. Copies are available in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently serving prison sentences in Her Majesty's prisons for sexual assault on a child; and what is the average sentence currently being served.

Mr. John Patten: Information in the form requested is not available. The number of offenders sentenced to immediate imprisonment or youth custody in 1985 for certain sexual offences against children is given in the following table, which also shows the average length of sentence imposed. For other offences it is not possible, from the records of the results of court proceedings held centrally, to distinguish the age of the victim.

Pregnant Women (Remand)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidelines regarding the circumstances in which pregnant women are placed on remand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In deciding whether or not to remand an accused person in custody, a magistrates' court is required by the terms of the Bail Act 1976 to have regard to any considerations which appear to be relevant. Such decisions are taken in the exercise of judicial discretion, in accordance with the provisions of the Bail Act 1976, and we would not think it right to issue guidance to the courts on how they should interpret their responsibilities in the light of individual circumstances.

Nenneh Jalloh and Mohammed Parkit

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will hold an urgent inquiry into the deaths of (a) Nenneh Jalloh on 24 April at Marylebone police station and (b) Mohammed Parkit on 1 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that he has not received any complaints arising from the deaths of either Mohammed Parkit, who did not die in police custody, or Nenneh Jalloh, and that there was no criticism of police action by the coroner at the inquests into their deaths. The Commissioner has referred the death of Nenneh Jalloh to the Police Complaints Authority, which is supervising an investigation into the circumstances in which it took place.

I have no plans to institute any other form of inquiry.

Immigration

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to extend the lease on the car ferry Earl William for use as an immigration detention centre.

Mr. Renton: The existing lease is for three months, with the option of extensions up to a maximum of 12 months. We have decided to exercise that option for a period of three months in the first instance.

Police Establishment (Newham)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many police officers there are at each of the police stations in the London borough of Newham, and as to what the comparable figures were for the three previous years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is set out in the table. Figures for 1984 are not available. The figures for 1987 are not comparable with those for earlier years, as manpower accounting procedures were changed during the force reorganisation; officers in certain units who had previously been carried on divisional strengths now form part of the establishment of area headquarters.

Economic League

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish in the Official Report the date and place of the police examination of the records of names held by the Economic League.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the police examination referred to took place at the Skipton offices of the Economic League on 25 March 1987.

Prison Department Houses (Culcheth, Warrington)

Mr. Doug Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in selling the empty prison houses and hostel in Culcheth, Warrington; how many have been sold; when the remainder will be placed on the market; what is the value of these empty properties; and how long they have now been empty.

Mr. John Patten: Marketing of the 39 empty prison officers' houses and hostel at Culcheth, which are being sold as a single block, has been resumed, following agreement with the local authority of adoption specifications for roads and services. A considerable amount of interest has been shown in the properties by prospective purchasers, but to date no firm offers have been received. Information about the value of the properties is subject to usual commercial confidentiality. The bulk of the houses have been empty for five to six years and the hostel for about five years.

Broadcasting

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's policy towards the encouragement of the development of an independent sector in broadcasting by the stipulation of a substantial proportion of independently-produced programmes on BBC and ITV; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Our policy is to ensure that at least 25 per cent. of programmes broadcast on both ITV and BBC television are supplied by independent producers as soon as possible. We have asked the IBA and BBC to come forward with firm plans for the achievement of this target.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of the Police Complaints Authority are engaged in supervising investigations of complaints against the police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Five members, supported by a staff, supervise investigations which are carried out by police officers.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases the Police Complaints Authority has dealt with over the last 12 months for which figures are available; and what percentage of the total number of complaints this represents.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The most recent statistics relating to complaints are published in the annual reports for 1986 of the Police Complaints Authority, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary and the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has completed his review of the arrangements for investigating allegations of misconduct made against senior police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Yes. This review was undertaken in the light of concern expressed about the investigation of allegations against the former deputy chief constable of Greater Manchester, Mr. John Stalker.

It had the benefit of observations from the Greater Manchester police authority, the Police Complaints Authority and the chief constable of West Yorkshire, Mr. Colin Sampson, all of whom were involved in the investigation of allegations against Mr. Stalker, and from the Association of Chief Police Officers and Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary.

The essential requirements of any disciplinary arrangements are that they should be fair and thorough and that they should afford adequate safeguards to the person against whom allegations are made. I have concluded that the present arrangements, which are contained in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and regulations continue to meet these criteria. In particular, I am satisfied that the central feature in these arrangements should continue to be the role of the police authority as disciplinary authority. It is the responsibility of the police authority to decide:

whether to launch an investigation against a senior police officer;

whether to suspend the officer from duty;

what action to take in the light of an investigating officer's report;

what punishment to award if the officer is found guilty.

The police authority does not have complete freedom in these matters. Thus, a decision to suspend a senior officer can be taken only with the approval of the Police Complaints Authority; and that authority can decide to supervise the investigation of any allegations. (In the case of the investigation of allegations made against Mr. Stalker, the Police Complaints Authority approved his suspension, supervised the investigation, and publicly stated its view that the allegations were serious enough to warrant investigation.) Moreover, if a police authority decides to bring disciplinary charges against a senior officer, it is a requirement that the charges must be drawn up by an independent solicitor and that they must be heard by a tribunal consisting of a single person selected from a list of persons nominated by the Lord Chancellor. Some of those consulted wanted still more scope for independent review of the police authority's role in the procedures, but there was no agreement on what form such further review might take.

Other matters considered during the review included the extensive media coverage of the investigation of allegations about Mr. Stalker and of the consideration of Mr. Sampson's report by the Greater Manchester police authority, and the absence of any right for senior officers to recover the costs of employing legal advice in investigations which do not lead to criminal or disciplinary proceedings. On the first issue, I have concluded that there is no case for any restriction on the reporting of investigations against police officers; and, as regards the payment of legal costs in discipline proceedings from public funds, I am not persuaded of the need to change the present arrangements under which a police authority has discretion to make a payment.

In the light of these conclusions, I have no plans to modify existing procedures by changes in the law. But the review has suggested that it might be useful to amplify the existing guidance on the procedures which must be followed when allegations are made against senior officers. Accordingly, I intend shortly to consult police authorities and other interested parties about the content of such further guidance.

Pool Competitions Act 1971

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has plans to renew the Pool Competitions Act 1971; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: No. In line with the policy as announced in Standing Committee on 5 July 1983 and on subsequent occasions, I have decided that the Pool Competitions Act 1971 should not be renewed. The Act will therefore lapse on 26 July. The few organisations affected have already been notified.

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about recent trends in the incidence of football hooliganism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The Association of Chief Police Officers for England and Wales has reported that the improvement in standards of crowd behaviour during the 1985-86 season was maintained during last season, which saw a welcome increase in overall attendances at football matches.

The police take the view that the use of closed-circuit television and the controls on alcohol have made a major contribution to the prevention of disorder inside grounds. They have been increasingly able to take prompt and effective action to control violent behaviour where it occurs, and have also tackled other forms of unacceptable behaviour such as racial chanting. This is reflected in the statistics for arrests at Football League matches and ejections from grounds in 1986-87, which show an increase in comparison with 1985-86. The figures for divisions 1 and 2 are as follows:

	1985-86	1986-87	Percentage change	1985-86	1986-87	Percentage change	Overall percentage change
Attendances	9,008,673	9,213,328	+ 2	3,542,028	4,144,905	+17	+ 6
Arrests	1,839	2,008	+ 9	1,050	1,708	+68	+29
Ejections	2,206	3,532	+60	1,089	1,255	+15	+45

The Government remain determined to seek further progress, in partnership with the football authorities, through measures such as the wider adoption of membership schemes and the exclusion order provisions of the Public Order Act 1986, which will come into force on 1 August.

Terrorism

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals held under the international provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 and against whom an extension of detention was authorised by the Secretary of State were (a) subsequently charged with an offence or (b) deported under the Immigration Act 1971.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 13 July 1987, c. 364]: From the implementation of the 1984 Act on 22 March 1984 to 31 March 1987, 24 persons whose detention under the international provisions of the Act had been extended beyond 48 hours were later charged with offences. I shall write to the hon. Member later about the numbers deported after having been so held.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals were successfully contacted from 1984 in connection with the comprehensive review of exclusion orders made under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts 1974 and 1976 that were still in force.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 13 July 1987, c. 364]: Ninety five people were successfully contacted in respect of the main review of exclusion orders made under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons excluded under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts 1974, 1976 and 1984 were excluded direct from prison after completing a prison term.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 13 July 1987, c. 363]: The information which can be provided without disproportionate cost relates to the period 1 January 1982 to 31 March 1987, during which 12 persons were excluded on release from prison.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons excluded under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts were originally detained in London.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 13 July 1987, c. 363]: The information which can be provided relates to the period from 1 January 1979 to 31 March 1987, during which a total of 30 persons were made subject to exclusion orders, having been originally detained by the Metropolitan police, eight of whom were detained in 1979, 12 in 1980 and two in 1981.

TRANSPORT

Barking-Gospel Oak Railway Line

Mr. Summerson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek a meeting with the chairman of British Rail to discuss the standard of services on the Barking to Gospel Oak line.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have agreed standards for the quality of BR services as a whole, which I shall be monitoring in general terms, but it would not be appropriate for me to discuss each and every service's performance with Sir Robert Reid. These aspects will be being watched carefully by the statutory consumer bodies, and I expect them to report on any persisting difficulties.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Temple-Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport for the last year for which records are available, how many accidents have occurred on (a) motorways, (b) other trunk roads for which his Department is responsible, and (c) other roads generally caused by the problems on the road or hard shoulder of broken down vehicles, involving (i) damage, (ii) personal injury and (iii) fatality.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I regret the information is not generally available. Reports received by the Department do not identify causes of accidents. The presence of broken-down vehicles is not recorded.

Kowloon Bridge

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to publish his Department's report on the grounding and subsequent sinking of the Kowloon Bridge.

Mr. David Mitchell: My noble Friend the Minister with responsibility for aviation and shipping has received the report and arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library. The report, made on behalf of the Hong Kong Administration, does not hold anyone to blame, but concludes that a succession of events associated with atrocious weather led to the grounding and loss of the Kowloon Bridge. Of these events, the most serious was the failure of the steering gear and this was probably linked to the grounding of the vessel while she was in Bantry Bay. A successful evacuation of all 28 persons on board was effected by RAF aircraft, which were using Cork airport at the time in connection with another rescue. Apart from an RAF winchman who sustained arm injuries, everyone else was rescued unhurt. The rescue was admirably carried out with RAF personnel displaying the courage and professionalism which we have come to expect in such circumstances. The master and his crew also carried out their part in the abandonment of the vessel with calmness and courage.

British Railways Board (Property)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on implementation of the recommendations made in the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the British Railways Board's property activities, published in June 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Railways Board is continuing to make good progress in implementing the commission's recommendations, and I am placing copies of its second response in the Library of the House.

A number of improvements have been made in the British Rail property board's organisation and management structure. This action has also taken account of advice from consultants appointed by the property board to review its organisation, management structure, systems and procedures, and working practices. I am pleased to note that simpler procedures for releasing land no longer needed for the railway have been introduced. In particular, I welcome the opportunities for increased sales of surplus land that the board has identified, amounting to an additional £100 million in its latest business plan. The board's development division has also been reviewed and reorganised, taking account of recommendations from a group of private sector property consultants.

Good progress is also being made in increasing the commercial exploitation of the board's operational property, with more extensive private sector involvement. The arch refurbishment programme, which generates income and helps the environment, has been stepped up to cover over 700 schemes over the last two years, and is expected to continue at a high level, and greater competition is being introduced in station trading.

I am also placing in the Library a copy of my Department's review of the board's liabilities for property no longer needed for the railway, particularly in connection with closed branch lines, as proposed by the commission. The property board's current and forecast levels of expenditure in this area are small in relation to the board's overall finances, and we see no case for removing the liabilities or for separately funding them. The evidence suggests that the property board should continue broadly with its present maintenance policies, negotiating with local highway authorities and other interested parties to shed its liabilities on the basis of voluntary agreements, taking every opportunity to transfer individual liabilities where this makes financial sense.

The Department will assist the board to establish an English and Welsh viaducts committee, similar to that which exists in Scotland, in order to provide a forum for considering the future of listed viaducts on closed railway lines, and we will support a further application to the Charity Commissioners seeking charitable status for the Railway Heritage Trust, if the board and the trust judge it advantageous. We will also keep under review the question of ownership and statutory responsibility for the board's road overbridges.

BAA Flotation

Mr. Haselhurst asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the tender offer in the British Airports Authority flotation.

Mr. Channon: The tender element in the offer for sale has proved very successful. Valid tender applications at or above 283p per share will be satisfied in full. Valid applications at 282p per share will be accepted and an allocation of about 15 per cent. of the shares applied for will be made.

The level of subscription for tender shares means that all the 125 million shares provisionally placed with institutions at the fixed price of 245p have been clawed back and the taxpayer will benefit by an extra £56 million of proceeds.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the total value in constant prices of all contributions made by member states of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's Development Assistance Committee to the United Nations children's fund since 1980.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is given in the tables at constant 1986 prices. The constant prices allow for the effects of both national rates of inflation and changing dollar exchange rates.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied that all 16-year-old school leavers in south Yorkshire will have the opportunity to be meaningfully engaged in the two-year training scheme during 1987.

Mr. Cope: The Government have given an undertaking that all unemployed 16-year-old school leavers will be offered a suitable place on 2-year YTS by the Christmas after they leave school. I am confident that all concerned will work to ensure that this guarantee will be substantially met in 1987 as it has been in previous years.

Youth Training Scheme

Ms. Armstrong asked the Secretary of State for Employment to what causes he attributes the fact, as revealed in "Regional Trades 1987", that a lower proportion of those who leave YTS schemes in the north find full-time employment, following completion of the scheme, than in any other region in Great Britain.

Mr. Cope: It is difficult to attribute regional variation in the placement rate of YTS trainees to particular factors, though the characteristics of the regional labour market are bound to have an influence.

It is encouraging that, in the six months from April to September 1986, 49 per cent. of those leaving one year YTS in the north entered full-time employment compared with 40 per cent. in 1985-86.

Child Abuse

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will instruct all agencies sponsored by his Department that any person employed under any scheme which involves working with children should be vetted for any previous history of child abuse or assault on children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The main programmes which provide support services for young children are community programme and YTS. I am not aware of any allegations of child abuse or assault in either of these programmes. The main providers of these programmes are local authorities and voluntary organisations. The Manpower Services Commission, which administers both programmes, requires providers to ensure appropriate selection of those entering the programmes and to maintain an appropriate level of supervision.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to ensure that the nuclear installations inspectorate achieves its target recruitment figure for inspectors of 150.

Mr. Cope: The Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) current target is to increase the number of Nuclear Installations Inspectors to 120 by 1 April 1988. The Government and the Health and Safety Commission and Executive remain committed to ensuring that the inspectorate is adequately staffed. A continuous recruitment competition is in progress. Substantial increases in the salaries paid to Nuclear Installations Inspectors have recently been agreed and should ensure that the inspectorate will now be able to attract a sufficient number of recruits.

Tourism

Mr. Matthew Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the potential for job creation in the tourist industry.

Mr. Lee: In recent years there has been substantial growth in the number of employees in those industries which most directly serve tourists (up by 46,000 in the hotel, catering and leisure and recreational services sectors in the year to March 1987).

On the basis of the indication we have so far, I would expect to see further significant growth in jobs in these industries in 1987.

Bridge Programmes

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many bridge programmes for unemployed managers and professionals have been set up since the scheme was first launched; and at what estimated annual cost;

(2) how many unemployed managers and professionals have been accepted into bridge programmes since the scheme was launched: and how many are estimated to have found permanent employment as a result.

Mr. Cope: In 1986-87, courses under the bridge programme were mounted by 43 training providers through 55 centres at a cost of £2·4 million. The cost of similar provision in earlier years cannot be separately identified, but available information on numbers helped is as follows:

Financial year	Number of trainee starts
1984-85	5,648
1985-86	6,795
1986-87	6,722
Total	22,900

The most recent follow-up survey of former bridge trainees, held in September 1986, indicated that some 59 per cent. had obtained employment or self-employment within three months of leaving the scheme.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the decision to end the bridge programme for unemployed managers and professionals; and what response he has offered.

Mr. Cope: Hon. Members, training providers and trainees have written about the need to continue provision for unemployed executives and managers seeking training in job-searching and interviewing skills. We have explained that the decision to withdraw funding from separate bridge courses was taken as part of a wider redeployment of resources to increase help for long-term unemployed people. Similar training assistance is available through the new job training scheme and jobclubs for those who have been unemployed for more than 26 weeks, and some opportunities will continue to be available for executives and managers with shorter periods of unemployment through the wider opportunities training programme.

Disposable Income

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish figures on the distribution of aggregate disposable income in 1985, showing lowest and highest deciles, upper and lower quartiles, and the median, for (a) all households in the United Kingdom and (b) for Greater London, in an adjusted form that will allow direct comparisons with the published figures for 1983 and earlier years.

Mr. Lee: The exact information requested is available only at disproportionate cost. However provision was made in analysis of the 1983 "Family Expenditure Survey" (when the introduction of the housing benefit scheme necessitated a change of income definition) to provide results on two bases. The figures below show 1985 and 1983 distributions from the "Family Expenditure Survey" on the current basis.

Pay Levels

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish tables showing the percentage increases in average pay levels from 1972, 1979 and 1983 up to the latest available date for the following groups of full-time adult workers: primary and secondary school teachers in England and Wales, National Health Service nurses and midwives, ambulancemen, National Health Service ancillary staff, National Health Service administrative and clerical staff, non-manual grades in local authority services, the police service, the fire service, prison officers, the Civil Service, subdivided as appropriate, but indicating separately, the professional and technology group and the science group, non-manual staff in gas, electricity and water, salaried staff in British Rail and clerical and executive grades in the Post Office.

Mr. Lee: The available information which is based on new earnings survey results for national agreements affecting these groups is shown in the table. Comparable information for 1972 was not collected for all the agreements shown.

WALES

Cardiff Bay Development Authority

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales who has been shortlisted by his Department for the position of chief executive of the Cardiff Bay development authority.

Mr. Peter Walker: The recruitment and appointment of a chief executive are matters for the Cardiff Bay development corporation.

Local Government Ombudsman

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by each Welsh district and county for the years 1980 to 1986 and classify by type of case (i) the number of complaints made to the local government ombudsman and (ii) the number of complaints upheld.

Mr. Grist: I have no information about the numbers of complaints against individual local authorities. The information you seek is held by the Commissioner for Local Administration in Wales who is independent of central Government.

Planning Inspectors

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many of his Department's planning inspectors speak both Welsh and English.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: One.

Housing

Mr. Dafydd Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to replace his Department's 1984 circular on housing provision in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Secretary of State has no plans to replace circular 47/84, "Land for Housing in Wales". However, further guidance on procedures involved in securing an adequate housing land supply is under consideration.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses are available for rent in (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector, in each district authority area in Wales; and what were the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: [pursuant to his reply, 21 July 1987]: The numbers of vacant local authority dwellings available for letting are set out in the following tables. Similar information is not available in respect of housing association or private sector dwellings.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Anglo-Argentine Relations

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Anglo-Argentine relations.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the Gracious Speech made from the Throne to both Houses on 25 June:

"My Government . . . will stand by their pledge to the people of the Falkland Islands, while seeking more normal relations with Argentina."

Central America

Mr. John Evans asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings he has had recently concerning proposals for a peaceful resolution of the conflict in central America.

Mr. Eggar: We regularly discuss central America with other Governments. Most recent discussions by my right honourable and learned Friend were with President Arias of Costa Rica and the Foreign Minister of Uruguay, Sr. Iglesias.

El Salvador

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide a detailed budget of Her Majesty's Government's current (a) military and (b) non-military aid programme to El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Military aid programme—no provision for 1987-88.

(b) Non-military aid programme—aid funds for 1987-88 have been allocated as follows:

United Kingdom Civilian Training Awards	17,000
Heads of Mission Gift Scheme	10,000
Books Presentation Programme	3,000
Unused balance of 1985 equipment grant	15,000

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of scholarships for study in Britain that are proposed for nominated students from El Salvador; where the students will study; on what courses; when the scholarships will commence; and what is the budget for the scholarship programme.

Mr. Eggar: There have been no students nominated for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office scholarships and awards scheme from El Salvador since that scheme began in 1983.

With regard to the ODA-funded awards for El Salvador announced in 1983, no nominations have been received since the awards first became available in the financial year 1985-86, but the allocation remains and stands at £17,000 for 1987-88 (which would cover about two awards).

Guatemala

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of Her Majesty's Government's technical scholarship programme for Guatemala; what is the cost of funding for the programme; on what date the scholarships will commence; what training will be offered by the scholarships and where; how many such scholarships are proposed; and what will be the selection procedure for candidates.

Mr. Eggar: Following the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with Guatemala, ODA will provide up to 6 scholarships in the United Kingdom with effect from 1987-88, at a total cost of £48,000 per annum.

Priority areas for study include public health, human nutrition, agriculture and water supply.

It is proposed that selection be assisted by a board, chaired by a representative of the British embassy and including a representative of the Government of Guatemala and local specialists appropriate to the applicant's field of study. Nominations have not yet been received for the scholarships; but it is envisaged that a selection board would meet before the end of the year and could still take candidates who might start their courses before the end of the financial year.

Guatemalan Ambassador

Mr. Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date he expects the new ambassador of Guatemala to arrive in Britain to take up his appointment; and where the new embassy will be.

Mr. Eggar: The Guatemalan ambassador arrived in the United Kingdom on Wednesday 15 July and took up his appointment on 16 July. He is currently making arrangements to acquire embassy premises.

Conference on Security and Co-operation

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present situation regarding the conference on security and co-operation in Europe negotiations.

Mr. Mellor: The Vienna conference on security and co-operation in Europe Meeting is still in its third and final phase, during which work is underway on drafting of a final document. We expect the meeting to go into recess at the start of August and to reconvene in late September. During the current round of negotiations, the United Kingdom delegation has continued to explain and defend the ambitious and constructive initiatives we have tabled in conjunction with other Western countries: these include proposals for a three-stage action programme designed to ensure concrete progress on human rights after Vienna, for an East-West economic conference in the Federal Republic of Germany and for an information forum in London. More recently, the Alliance tabled on 10 July a proposal for further work on confidence and security building measures. We also remain concerned about the many breaches by the Soviet Union and Eastern European countries of their current CSCE commitments, and have continued to raise these issues regularly in debate.

High Commissions, Embassies and Consulates

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many high commissions, embassies and consulates Her Majesty's Government sustain in (a) Commonwealth and (b) non-commonwealth countries.

Mr. Eggar: In Commonwealth countries there are 42 High Commissions, 4 Deputy High Commissions, 9 Consulates-General, 5 Consulates and 3 Offices of Honorary British Representatives.

In non-Commonwealth countries there are 87 embassies, 36 consulates-general and 168 consulates or vice-consulates.

United Nations Agencies

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total value in constant prices of all contributions made by Her Majesty's Government to all United Nations agencies since 1970.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Military Exercises

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the implementation of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe agreement on military exercises as it affects this autumn's North Atlantic Treaty Organisation exercises in the United Kingdom and Germany;

(2) whether Warsaw pact observers will be invited to visit the United Kingdom under the conference on security and co-operation in Europe agreement to observe this autumn's exercises.

Mr. Mellor: The exercises taking place in the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany this autumn were included in the annual calendars of notifiable military activities for 1987 produced by NATO countries in accordance with the provisions of the Stockholm Document. The United Kingdom will be involved in three: "Certain Strike" and "Keystone", both in the FRG, in September and October respectively and "Purple Warrior" in Scotland in November. All Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe states will be invited to send observers to these three exercises, all of which are above the observation as well as the notification threshold.

Falkland Islands (Fishing)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of fishing licences and quotas off the Falkland Islands for the coming year; and whether the total catch is such as to be self sustainable in the present unchanging ecology.

Mr. Eggar: Eighty-five fishing licences have been allocated by the Falkland Islands Government for the second season, 1 July to 31 December 1987. The number is consistent with estimated sustainable catch levels for squid and finfish. Arrangements for 1988 will be decided in the autumn after analysis of catch data gathered in the first six months of 1987.

Foreign Affairs Council

Sir Philip Goodhart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 20 July.

Mrs. Chalker: I attended the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 20 July.

The Council agreed a programme of work on the future financing of the Community. It reflects United Kingdom priorities satisfactorily.

The Council reaffirmed its concern at the possible consequences for bilateral and world trade of United States trade legislation; and the Community's determination to respond to any United States restrictive measures in accordance with its GATT rights, if necessary. The Council asked the Commission to continue to make every effort to reach a satisfactory settlement with the United States in the dispute over export restitutions on pasta and agreed that the Community would need to respond to any restrictive measures unilaterally imposed by the United States.

The Council noted that reasonable, if modest, progress had been made in the Community's negotiations with Japan to reduce barriers to trade in a number of sectors (motor vehicles, cosmetics, medical equipment), but that there was a need for quicker progress on a wider range of sectors and the establishment of timetables for the implementation of measures already agreed.

The Council adopted the annual report on EC/EFTA Co-operation. Ministers welcomed the progress which had been made towards the achievement of a wider European economic area and stressed the importance of keeping up the momentum as the EC made progress in the internal market.

The Council discussed but did not approve a Commission proposal for a phased reduction of the crisis levy imposed in 1981 on the emoluments of Community officials. A staff request for conciliation was agreed.

The Presidency reported to the Council that agreement had been reached on the Framework Programme for Research and Development for 1987-1991. The agreement implements the proposal put to the European Council by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Turks and Caicos Islands (Development Project)

Mr. Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the outcome of the commission of inquiry into the North Creek development project in the Turks and Caicos Islands.

Mr. Eggar: The Commission, led by Mr. Louis Blom-Cooper QC, has submitted its report to the Governor. The Report is being printed as a Command Paper and copies are being placed in the Library of the House.

The report finds that Mr. Terence Donegan committed various acts of misfeasance in public office while Attorney General of the Turks and Caicos Islands from 1980 to 1982 in promoting the Little Bluff Development Company in which he had a considerable interest and in failing in his fiduciary duty to the Crown.

In the light of the report the Governor has decided that it is not in the public interest that Mr. Donegan should remain in the islands. Acting upon his own authority under the powers vested in him in the constitution and the local Immigration Ordinance the Governor has therefore issued a deportation order against Mr. Donegan. The question of restitution of profits and the possible restitution of alienated Crown Lands by compulsory purchase under the constitution are matters which are the legitimate interest of the Turks and Caicos Islands Government and have been referred to them for decision. We fully endorse the Governor's decision.

The report also makes it clear that in seeking to promote the development of Crown Lands at North Creek through a project involving the Raul Construction Company certain TCI Ministers in the Executive Council acted without proper regard for the public interest.

No action is considered necessary in the case of those Ministers. One of the Ministers concerned was sentenced by United States Courts for drugs-related offences in 1985. Another was among those who resigned office shortly before the decision to suspend Ministerial Government in the TCI announced on 25 July last year. No other Ministers appear to be implicated.

This is the third Commission on TCI matters since January 1986. All three have revealed serious weaknesses in the administration of the Islands. Our decision to suspend Ministerial Government in the Islands in July 1986, and our action following the Report of the constitutional Commission appointed in September last year, shows that Her Majesty's Government are fully determined to correct these weaknesses and to ensure that the Islands are provided with the responsible administration to which they have an undoubted right.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Costs

Mr. Skinner asked the Prime Minister (1) what is the latest figure for the cost of entertaining at (a) Chequers and (b) 10 Downing street since (i) May 1979 and (ii) July 1983;

(2) what is the latest cost figure for maintaining her Private Office since May 1979;

(3) what is the latest figure for the cost of her foreign tours since May 1979.

The Prime Minister: The cost of maintaining my Office since 1979 (including the full costs for the financial year 1979-80) is £25,350,000; of foreign visits since May 1979 is £2,923,000; and of entertainment (i) since May 1979 is £146,000 and (ii) since July 1983 is £82,000. The figures for entertainment cover both Chequers and No. 10 Downing street; the information is not available by location.

Telecommunications

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Prime Minister whether she had an opportunity of discussing with President Reagan the common interests of the United Kingdom and the United States of America in a speedy resolution to the negotiations for the second KDD international telecommunications network in Japan.

The Prime Minister: No. The United States Administration, however, are well aware of our views.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will introduce legislation to amend the Official Secrets Act so as to provide that civil servants who provide information to Mr. Speaker are not open to prosecution in the courts.

The Prime Minister: We have no plans at present to amend the Official Secrets Act.

British Museum

Mr. William Powell asked the Prime Minister if she has reviewed departmental responsibility for the British Museum (Natural History); and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have decided that responsibility for the British Museum (Natural History) should be transferred from the Secretary of State for Education and Science to the Minister for the Arts. Such a change will enable this world famous museum to play its full part alongside the other great national museums and galleries in the Government's developing policies for the national heritage. It will also enhance its potential for collaboration with the other museums, particularly those in South Kensington.

I and my Ministerial colleagues concerned hope and intend that, following the transfer which will come into effect on 1 August, the museum will maintain and develop its distinguished scientific standing and strong working links with the scientific community. The Royal Society will continue as now to advise on the appointment of one member of the trustees; this advice will in future be given to the Minister for the Arts. In addition the museum will be eligible to apply in future on a competitive basis to the bodies funded from the science budget for research grants and awards allocated by normal peer review procedures.

The transfer will not imply or require any change in the pay, conditions and grading of current or future staff.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Prime Minister whether she will repeat her instruction that, to preserve the confidentiality of hon. Members' correspondence with Ministers, acknowledgement cards will not be sent out naked, but enclosed in an envelope.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 9 July 1987, c. 208]: I have arranged for Departments to be advised that, in order to preserve the confidentiality of hon. Members' correspondence with Ministers, where acknowledgement cards are not sent in envelopes they should omit the subject matter of constituents' correspondence.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Retired Judges

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the practice of retired judges in receipt of pensions continuing to preside as judges.

The Attorney-General: Retired judges in receipt of pensions may sit as deputy judges in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of the Supreme Court Act 1981, in the case of judges of the Supreme Court, and section 24 of the Courts Act 1971, as amended by section 146 of the Supreme Court Act 1981, in the case of circuit judges.

Judge John Edward Jones

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General how many sittings Judge John Edward Jones has had since his retirement; and what remuneration he has received.

The Attorney-General: Since his retirement in 1984, his Honour Judge John Edward Jones has sat a total of 311½ days. He received payment at the current daily rates.

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General what pension Judge John Edward Jones receives following his retirement; and what is the level of that pension.

The Attorney-General: On retirement, his Honour John Edward Jones was granted a pension in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of the Judicial Pensions Act 1981. It is accepted practice not to divulge the details of an individual's personal pension.

Mr. Peter Wright

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General what is the estimated cost of sending Mr. John Lewis to Australia to plead before the New South Wales Court of Appeal in relation to the Peter Wright proceedings.

The Attorney-General: I do not give details of the fees of individual counsel.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General whether he intends to bring an action for criminal contempt against the Sunday Telegraph, for publishing material on 19 July taken from the book, "Spycatcher" by Mr. Peter Wright; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The matter is under consideration.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General whether he intends to bring an action for criminal contempt against The Observer, for publishing material on 19 July in an article by David Leigh, the contents of which were drawn from the book, "Spycatcher" by Peter Wright; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The matter is under consideration.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Special Education

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements exist for the training of teachers in respect of meeting special educational needs in Northern Ireland; how many teachers in Northern Ireland are currently qualified to teach children with special educational needs; and what changes he plans in this provision.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Licensed Bookmakers

Mr. Ian Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to permit licensed bookmaking offices in Northern Ireland to show televised broadcasts of races and other events on which betting takes place.

Mr. Needham: Yes, it is my attention to make an order for this purpose as soon as possible under article 32 (14) of the Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (Northern Ireland) Order 1985.

South Tyrone Hospital

Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were on the waiting list for surgery at the South Tyrone hospital, Dungannon on 1 January 1986, and on the first day of each subsequent month up to, and including, 1 July.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to his reply, 17 July 1987]: The available information is as follows:

DEFENCE

Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the safety of the community in Salisbury and in nearby villages in view of experiments with gas and chemicals at the Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down.

Mr. Sainsbury: All work carried out at the Chemical Defence Establishment, (CDE) Porton Down, is subject to exacting safety standards. The procedures followed conform fully with the appropriate national and international standards and the establishment is open to inspection by the Health and Safety Executive. I can assure my hon. Friend that the work of the CDE poses no hazard to the local community, which includes many members of staff and their families.

Military Research Spending

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the comparisons, as a percentage of gross domestic product at 1987 prices, between (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the United States of America, (c) Japan, (d) West Germany and (e) France for military research spending in non-governmental establishments.

Mr. Sainsbury: Total Government spending on defence R and D as a percentage of GDP in the countries stated is given in table F1a of the "Annual Review of Government Funded R and D 1986". In the United Kingdom, 0·036 per cent. of GDP will be spent on extra-mural defence research in the financial year 1987-88, but comparable figures are not readily available for other countries. Statistics on private venture research expenditure by the United Kingdom defence industry are not held centrally.

Extra-Mural Research Projects

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department issues a list of extra-mural research projects which it is willing to fund.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence carries out extra-mural research in the major fields described in the MOD section of the "Annual Review of Government Funded R and D".

Further detail on areas of interest is given in the brochures of the small firms research initiative and the joint Research Council/Ministry of Defence research grants scheme.

Research contracts over £500,000 are covered by the MOD contracts bulletin.

Training Exercises (Live Contaminants)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to the statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) on 15 July, he will give the chemical formula of (a) radium sulphate and (b) any other live contaminants used in military training exercises.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) all radioactive materials used in training exercise simulating nuclear accidents and (b) the half-life of each radionuclide involved.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The table shows the live contaminants used in nuclear accident response exercises and training and their approximate half-lives. In addition, a number of sealed sources have been used for such purposes as instrument calibration. The use of all these materials is subject to stringent precautions to ensure the safety of the public and participating personnel. The smallest quantities of such materials are used and they are of very low levels of radioactivity. Even at the time of exercises they are of no more than the lowest level of radioactivity required to achieve instrument readings for training purposes.

Radioisotope	Half-life	Chemical formula
Actinon (Radon 219) daughters	40 minutes	Rn
Radium 223 sulphate	11·4 days	$Ra\ SO_4$
Radium 224 chloride	3·65 days	$Ra\ Cl_2$
Radium 224 sulphate	3·65 days	$Ra\ SO_4$
Technetium 99m	6 hours	Tc
Yttrium 90 oxide	64 hours	Y_2O_3

RTM 322 Engine

Mr. Page asked the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, South-West, Official Report, column 162, on 2 July, over the evaluations of the RTM 322 engine in the SH60B by the United States authorities, how the evaluation is proceeding in those tests which were started some two months earlier than 6 June.

Mr. Sainsbury: RTM 322 engines were installed in the SH60B during February, in preparation for the United States navy evaluation. Some initial ground running and flying were then carried out before the aircraft was handed over to the United States navy on 6 June. I understand that, during that preparatory period, the testing was entirely satisfactory and the engines performed fully up to expectations.

Exercise Reforger

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether United States Air Force, Army, Navy and reserve units will exercise in the United Kingdom as part of this autumn's Reforger exercises;

(2) how many United States regular and reserve service men and women will visit the United Kingdom during this autumn's Reforger exercises.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I am advised that some 2,000 United States service personnel, regulars and reserves, are expecting to visit the United Kingdom to take part in Exercise Reforger. The breakdown of this figure between the services is classified.

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether air-launched cruise missiles will be deployed in Britain as part of the Reforger 87 exercises.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The position remains as stated by my right hon. Friend, the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley) in his answers to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 18 June 1984 at column 41, 26 July 1984 at columns 751-52, and 15 November 1985 at column 309.

Nuclear Weapons (Exercises)

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give details of any of this autumn's exercises involving either British forces or British territory and airspace which will simulate the use of nuclear weapons;

(2) whether any estimate of civilian casualties will be made as part of Exercise Certain Strike;

(3) if he will give the total civilian casualties estimated during Exercise Lionheart.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Details of exercise scenarios are classified.

NATO Exercises

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the titles and purposes of each of this autumn's North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's exercises involving British territory or forces;

(2) if he will list by both constituency and exercise name such information as is yet available on the United Kingdom Army and Royal Air Force units which will participate in this autumn's North Atlantic Treaty Organisation exercises in the United Kingdom and Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In general it is not the Government's policy to provide details of United Kingdom participation in forthcoming NATO exercises prior to their announcement by the relevant NATO authority.

Warsaw Pact Exercises

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the most recent Warsaw pact exercises in Germany involving (a) more than 80,000 ground and air forces and (b) more than 50,000 ground and air forces.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Under the 1975 Helsinki final act, states were encouraged to notify major military manoeuvres exceeding a total of 25,000 troops. The Warsaw pact has held much larger exercises in the Soviet Union than in Germany. However, a number of exercises held in the GDR were notified, although the only notified exercise of the size specified by the hon. Member was a ground, air and naval exercise involving 60,000 troops which was held partly in the GDR in 1984. Under the Stockholm document, which came into operation on 1 January this year, it is mandatory to notify military activities involving more than 13,000 troops; but none of the exercises planned to be held in the GDR this year involves 50,000 or more troops.

Cruise Missiles

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the use of either conventional or nuclear submarine-launched cruise missiles will be included in any exercise involving either British Army of the Rhine or the northern flank this autumn.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The United Kingdom has no submarine-launched cruise missiles. It is not for Her Majesty's Government to comment on the training of other national military forces in exercises of this nature.

United States Navy Vessels (Visits)

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the visits to United Kingdom ports of United States Navy vessels by ship name, ship type and port in the last year for which such information is available.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling, the then Minister of State for the Armed forces, told the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 20 February 1984 at column 432, 13 March 1984 at column 132 and 16 May 1985 at columns 209-10, full records of visits by United States Navy ships are not generally held. However the following information is available, covering the period 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987:

Tactical Nuclear Forces

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what decisions have been taken regarding the modernisation of the tactical nuclear forces of the Army or Royal Navy or Royal Air Force.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on 24 March 1987 at column 162.

Exercise Certain Strike

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether French forces will participate in exercise Certain Strike.

Mr. Ian Stewart: That is a matter for the French Government.

Military Aircraft Losses (Training Exercises)

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish a list of all military aircraft lost, damaged or irreparably damaged over the United Kingdom in the last 12 years, including aircraft belonging to foreign powers and aircraft assigned to NATO but not British, involved in training exercises over the United Kingdom mainland.

Mr. Freeman: Details of losses of, and serious damage to, aircraft of the three United Kingdom services are published each year in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates". Details of accidents over the United Kingdom mainland involving foreign aircraft are not held centrally and the collation of the information requested would involve disproportionate cost and effort.

Materials and Equipment (Bolton)

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information is given by his Department to local authorities and police of the nature of cargoes of defence materials and equipment parked overnight in Bolton.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has no knowledge of any cargoes of defence materials and equipment being parked overnight in Bolton. If the hon. Member would care to write to me with further details I will have the matter fully investigated.

Defence Review

Mr. Allen asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is planning to announce a Defence Review.

Mr. Stewart: No.

RAF Binbrook

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is yet able to make a statement on the future of RAF Binbrook.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The future of RAF Binbrook has been under review for some time as a result of plans to withdraw the Lightning air defence force from service in September 1988.

A number of options for the future of the station after that date have been evaluated including both operational flying tasks and ground training functions. However, after a thorough and careful examination of defence needs and possible uses for the station, I regret to say that no alternative use has been identified and RAF Binbrook will therefore be closed at the end of 1988. We plan to retain the airfield there as a relief landing ground for RAF Scampton and as a war reserve airfield to provide flexibility for dispersed operations. In the light of this decision, other Government Departments who might have a possible interest in the facilities will be consulted.

There will be no requirement for permanent staff at RAF Binbrook, either civilian or service, after the closure. Civilian staff, other than those who will reach normal retirement age or leave voluntarily, will be offered redundancy terms. Full consultation with the trades union side will be pursued in the usual way. Service personnel will be redeployed elsewhere, including a small detachment to RAF Scampton who will commute to RAF Binbrook.

Lea Aviation Ltd.

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if it is with his approval that two serving Royal Air Force officers are directly connected with a private company, Lea Aviation Limited, using Royal Air Force assets for commercial gain;

(2) what are the guidelines for circumstances whereby serving military personnel are allowed to be directly connected with commercial organisations whose business includes the use, for private profit, of military equipment.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1987, c. 7*l*]: Serving military personnel who wish to be connected with commercial organisations of any sort are required by the Queen's Regulations to seek approval; in the case of the Royal Air Force by QR(RAF) paragraph J910. The two serving Royal Air Force officers connected with Lea Aviation Ltd. have received approval under this regulation.

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) who authorised the use by Lea Aviation Limited of an airshow on the North Weald airfield, Epping, of front-line Royal Air Force aircraft including Tornados, Harriers and Hawks;

(2) on what basis is the amount paid by Lea Aviation Limited to his Department for the use of Royal Air Force assets computed;

(3) whether the contract for the use of Royal Air Force aircraft at the recent private airshow operated by Lea Aviation Limited at the North Weald Airfield, Epping, was put out for tender;

(4) who provided the security arrangements for the protection of the Tornado, Harrier and Hawk aircraft which took part in a recent airshow organised by Lea Aviation Limited at North Weald Airfield, Epping; and who paid for the arrangements.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1987, c. 71]: The presence of RAF aircraft at the air display at North Weald on 27-28 June was authorised under long-standing arrangements for the participation by the Royal Air Force in public functions in the United Kingdom and elsewhere. For the 1987 display season RAF resources have so far been allocated to some 328 events including that at North Weald. Charges for RAF participation in this event, were levied in accordance with regulations made by the Ministry of Defence: the organisers also provided and paid for security arrangements to the standard agreed with the RAF.

RAF Boulmer

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many married quarters at RAF Boulmer have been vacant for more than 12 months.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 16 July 1987, c. 71]: There are three married quarters at RAF Boulmer which have been vacant for more than 12 months.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the strategic and tactical role of the British Army of the Rhine of French plans to place nuclear weapons in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply he received from my hon. Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) to his related questions on 16 July at column 636.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Research (Tax Relief)

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax relief is allowed against expenditure on research by private industry in the United Kingdom; and how this compares with the position in (a) the United States of America, (b) Japan, (c) West Germany and (d) France.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A recent Inland Revenue and Her Majesty's Treasury study "Fiscal Incentives for Research and Development Spending" (a copy of which has been placed in the Library) reviewed the tax treatment of R & D spending in the United Kingdom and nine other OECD countries, including the United States of America, Japan, West Germany and France. In all the countries studied most research expenditure, being on current account, is allowed for tax purposes in the year in which it is incurred. In the United Kingdom this treatment extends also to trade-related capital expenditure on scientific research. The position in each of the other countries is described in the survey referred to.

International comparisons are difficult, but, broadly speaking, while the overall effect of the corporate tax systems in the United Kingdom, Japan and West Germany is more or less neutral in relation to R & D investments, France and the United States offer very small incentives to invest. The evidence of the cost-effectiveness of such incentives remains uncertain but in general it suggests that only one half the value of tax revenues forgone by Governments under such schemes is actually spent by companies on additional R & D.

Income Tax

Mr. Wigley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many households in Wales with incomes of £125 per week or less pay income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information held is in terms of tax units (married couples and single persons) rather than households. About 390,000 tax units resident in Wales were liable to income tax and had earned income averaging £125 per week or less assessable for 1984-85, the latest year for which information is available.

Civil Servants

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many under-secretaries, assistant secretaries and senior principals there were in post on the latest available date; and how many of each there were on the same date in 1979, 1981, 1983 and 1985, respectively.

Mr. Brooke: From 1 January 1984 under-secretary was designated as Grade 3 and unified Grades 5 and 6 were also introduced. Grade 5 comprises former assistant secretaries and their equivalents in the Science, Professional and Technology and other groups. Grade 6 includes Senior Principals and equivalents.

The information available for 1 January of each year is as follows:

Grade	1979	1981	1983	1985	1987
3	625	587	511	490	489
5	2,228	2,182	2,032	2,021	2,108
6	3,095	3,763	3,484	3,376	3,734

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he would define the functions of (a) assistant secretary and (b) senior principal, as distinct from the functions of other grades in the Home Civil Service.

Mr. Brooke: The grades of assistant secretary and senior principal were incorporated into the unified grades 5 and 6 respectively on the extension of the Home Civil Service open structure on 1 January 1984.

The duties of grades 5 and 6 are described in grading guidance booklets issued by my Department, copies of which have been deposited in the Libraries of the House.

VAT (Zero Rating)

Mr. Watts asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will place in the Library a copy of the report for the hearing of case 416/85 before the European Court of Justice brought by the Commission of the European Communities against the United Kingdom concerning the zero-rating of certain goods and services.

Mr. Brooke: A copy of the report for the hearing of case 416/85 before the European Court of Justice on 15 September 1987 has today been placed in the Library of the House. This is a document prepared by the court on the basis of the submissions put to it and summarises the main issues. It cannot be expected to reflect the full force of the Government's arguments, which will be vigorously pursued by counsel at the hearing itself. It is not the practice to disclose written pleadings before the ECJ without the agreement of the other party to the case, in this case the Commission. We have approached the Commission to see whether, in the particular circumstances, it would be prepared to agree to publication. But a summary of the Government's position and the general rules on confidentiality of pleadings are set out in appendices 2 and 3 respectively of the fourth report from the Treasury and Civil Service Committee (Session 1986-87) "The defence of VAT zero-rating".

Financial Services

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in establishing the regulatory regime for the wholesale markets under section 43 of the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Lilley: Under section 43 of the Financial Services Act the Treasury has responsibility for approving the conditions that the Bank of England intends imposing for admission to its list of exempted persons and the arrangements for a person's admission to and removal from it. Draft conditions and arrangements were set out in a consultative document jointly issued by the Treasury and the Bank of England in December 1986. ("The future regulation of the wholesale markets in sterling, foreign exchange and bullion"). Following revisions in the light of comments received, the Treasury has now approved the following conditions and arrangements:

"An applicant will need to satisfy the Bank that it is 'fit and proper', by reason of its capital, managerial and operational resources, its standards of business conduct and its high reputation and standing, to undertake the particular activity and also that it acts on a regular basis as a market maker or broker in one or more of the wholesale market instruments. In determining whether an applicant meets these conditions, the Bank will take into account the following factors:

(a) that the financial position of the applicant is sound;

(b) that its ownership structure does not result in any unacceptable conflicts of interest, nor is in any other way a source of potential weakness;

(c) that its management and staff are of high quality and appropriate experience and that its systems are effective;

(d) that its reputation in the market place is good;

(e) that it is able and willing to adhere to an undertaking to observe the London Code of Conduct, as specified by the Bank of England from time to time;

(f) that it acts as a market maker or broker in one or more of the wholesale market instruments. In those markets where prices are quoted continuously, the term market maker will be taken to mean an institution which, as principal, holds itself out generally and continuously as willing to make a price in the relevant instrument. In less continuous markets (eg in bullion, swaps or options), the Bank will wish to include those institutions who are generally willing to make a price in the relevant instrument. But, unlike for example in the gilt-edged market, there is no absolute commitment or obligation on market makers in the wholesale markets to make prices regardless of market conditions; the Bank is concerned with those institutions whose function is normally to do so."

A firm applying for inclusion on the list will be required to submit a business plan setting out the type or types of activity it intends to undertake, including types of instrument (and currencies) in which it intends to trade. Its permitted scope will be limited to those activities agreed with the Bank, subject to review. Applicants should supply any information requested by the Bank which the Bank reasonably requires to form its view on the application.

Applications should in any event, unless explicitly agreed with the Bank, include the business plan described above, a description of the applicant's organisation and staff resources, details of ownership, information on directors and managers, and details of internal control systems. Where appropriate, applicants should specify which of their operations are already supervised, and by whom.

The Bank will also require the applicant's latest audited accounts. Where it would fall to the Bank to assess an applicant's capital adequacy, the applicant will be asked for any additional information necessary to demonstrate its financial soundness.

The Bank will aim to give its decision within three months of receiving an application. Where the Bank is minded to reject an application, it will give the applicant notice of that fact and specify its reasons. The Bank will allow the applicant reasonable opportunity to make representations and will consider any representations made before coming to a decision.

Once established on the list, an institution will need to continue to satisfy the Bank that it should remain listed.

The Bank will give notice to any listed institution which it considers should no longer be included on the list that it may be removed from the list. The Bank will give its reasons for taking that view. The institution will be given reasonable opportunity to make representations as to why it should not be removed from the list and, where relevant, to take remedial action, before the Bank comes to a decision.

Where the Bank, having considered the representations of an applicant whose application it is minded to reject or an institution it is minded to remove from the list, remains of the view that the application should be rejected or the institution removed, it will specify its reasons for rejecting these representations. The applicant or the institution may have the matter reviewed by a suitable independent person(s) appointed by the Bank for that purpose, such as a member of the panel established under section 96 of the Financial Services Act. In addition to considering and reporting on the substantive issues, the person(s) conducting the review will decide who should pay the costs of review. There will normally be a presumption that where the Bank's decision is supported, these costs will be borne by the applicant or institution. The Bank will require a prior written undertaking from the applicant or institution concerned to pay such costs, if any, as are awarded against it.

Later this week the Bank of England will publish a paper setting out in detail how it intends to supervise these markets, a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

Tax Consultative Committee

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions in the past three years officials from his Department have been involved in meetings of the Tax Consultative Committee; which officials were involved; with whom they met; what is the purpose of the meetings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 21 July 1987]: The Tax Consultative Committee, which is chaired by a Treasury Minister, has met on nine occasions in the past three years. It is an informal body consisting of senior Inland Revenue and Treasury officials, and of people knowledgeable about tax from the point of view of industry, commerce, accountancy and the law. The meetings cover a wide range of taxation topics.

Tax Relief

Mr. Wigley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the amount spent on mortgage tax relief in Wales, Scotland and each of the English regions in each financial year since 1979 both at outturn and 1987 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 21 July 1987]: Estimates for the years 1979-80 to 1982-83 have been derived from the results of the survey of personal incomes and are given in the table.

Following the introduction of MIRAS in April 1983, regional information on the cost of mortgage interest relief cannot be extracted from Inland Revenue records. The regional distribution of mortgage interest can be estimated from the "Family Expenditure Survey" but, as the sample size for the FES is relatively small, it is not possible to provide robust estimates of regional trends for the period after 1982-83. Accordingly, the following tables show the cost of mortgage interest relief in the United Kingdom from 1983-84 to 1987-88 with the percentage distribution of the relief by county and region, based on FES data from 1983 to 1985.

Mr. Grylls asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to enable Members of Parliament with various interests outside Parliament from which they earn income, to elect to be self employed as regards the whole of their income including Parliamentary salary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to the reply, 20 July 1987]: No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EC (Butter)

Mr. John Marshall asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he now has to reimburse charities for all the costs involved in the distribution of free European Economic Community butter to pensioners.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Community-funded payments were made for the cost of packaging and of transport to the charities' own distribution points. As we made clear at the outset of the scheme to representatives of the charities, neither Community nor national funds are available for other costs.

Green Pound (Pig Farmers)

Mr. Shersby asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the effect of the recent changes in the value of the green pound and changes in the method of calculating the monetary compensatory amounts on (a) the price of pigmeat imported into the United Kingdom and (b) swill pig farmers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: These changes will reduce the MCAs paid on imports into the United Kingdom and the charges on exports of pigmeat from the United Kingdom. Taken together with the helpful reductions agreed in other members states positive MCAs, this should help to make our industry more competitive and so help all pig farmers in the United Kingdom. The precise benefit cannot be stated as this will depend, to a certain extent, on future movements in sterling.

Milk

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what have been the reductions in milk production in each in each European Community country since April 1984; and what estimate has been made of what further reductions need to be made in order to eliminate surplus production.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Milk deliveries to dairies per member state in 1985-86 compared with 1983-84 are as follows:

Member State	'000 tonnes 1983-84	1985-86	per cent. difference

Last autumn the European Commission estimated that a reduction in production of 9·5 million tonnes was required to restore balance to the dairy market. It is intended that 7 million tonnes of this should be achieved by the measures already imposed for this marketing year and the remaining 2·5 million tonnes by the further cuts agreed for 1988-89.

Exports

Mr. Amess asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the top 10 agricultural products exported from Great Britain in 1986, in each case giving the amounts produced and the amounts exported.

Mr. Gummer: The top 10 exported agricultural commodities can be defined in a variety of ways. The following table shows those commodities which had the largest export values in 1986. The export information is not completely comparable with the production figures as it includes overseas produce re-exported from the United Kingdom.

Commodities, such as tea, which consist entirely of re-exports have not been included in the table. All the information relates to the United Kingdom as information for Great Britain is not readily available.

Fishing Industry

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with the chairman of the Sea Fish Industry Authority about the future of the fishing industry.

Mr. Gummer: My Department maintains close contact with the Sea Fish Industry Authority on matters concerning the future of the fishing industry and I last met the chairman on Monday 20 July.

EEC Food Statistics

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of (a) the total agricultural support for the European Economic Community, (b) overall European Economic Community expenditure and (c) total European Economic Community agricultural exports, at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. MacGregor: Expenditure in 1986 under the common agricultural policy amounted to 23 billion ecu (£14,900 million). Final outturn figures for total Community expenditure are not yet available, but the budget provision was 35,174 mecu (£22,800 million). The value of exports from the European Community of agricultural products in 1986 was nearly 29 billion ecu (£18,800 million). (Source: Eurostat.)

Irradiated Food

Mr. Steel asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on his Department's policy with regard to irradiation as a method of food preservation;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that all food treated by irradiation will be clearly labelled.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services and I are considering the current legislation which prohibits the general irradiation of food in this country in the light of the Report of the Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods. An announcement about whether we intend to issue proposals to amend the existing legislation will be made after we have fully considered the Report and the representations received on it. Consideration will include the advice in the Report of the Food Advisory Committee on the labelling of irradiated food, that if the irradiation of food is permitted such foods should be required to be clearly labelled.

Bovine Somatotropin

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what experiments have been carried out into the effect on cattle of injection of bovine somatotropin; what representations he has received concerning the prospect of the milk of such cattle being included in the general pool for human consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The data relating to experiments on the effect on cattle of injection of bovine somatotropin were submitted to my Department in support of applications for animal test certificates under the Medicines Act 1968. The Act prohibits the disclosure of such information.

So far this year hon. Members have asked five questions and have sent me letters from about 80 constituents.

About 180 members of the public (including some who had written to hon. Members) wrote to me directly.

As hon. Members already know, the Farm Animal Welfare Council has been asked to look at the wider welfare implications of using BST in cows and to produce a report. Their report, in addition to all the other information available to me, will be taken into account in reaching any decisions that fall to me under domestic or Community legislation.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the dangers arising from the use of bovine somatatropin in milk.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Currently field trials of bovine somatatropin are in progress authorised by animal test certificates granted under the Medicines Act 1968 by my Department. Before such certificates were granted, we were satisfied as to the safety of the consumer of milk or other produce from treated animals, among a number of other matters laid down in the Medicines Act. These questions were thoroughly scrutinised by a committee of independent experts including medical doctors as well as by my officials. Had doubts on this score been revealed, the certificates for the animal tests would not have been granted. Additionally, I have asked the Farm Animal Welfare Council for its advice on the animal welfare implications of this product.

Saddlers' List

Sir Michael Shaw asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has reached a final decision on the future of the saddlers' list arrangements made under the Medicines Act 1968 under which for a three-year period registered saddlers were permitted to sell a specified range of medicinal products for horses.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Following statutory consultation with representative organisations, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales and I have decided that these arrangements should be made permanent. The necessary Order will be laid before Parliament in the autumn.

THE ARTS

Acceptances in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds asked the Minister for the Arts when the Office of Arts and Libraries proposes to issue a press notice giving information laid before the House, in accordance with section 9(6) of the National Heritage Act 1980, specifying disposals and transfers of property accepted in lieu of capital transfer tax or inheritance tax carried out during the financial year 1986-87, and including particulars of the bodies or institutions to whom transfers were made and the amount of tax satisfied in each case.

Mr. Luce: The statement is being prepared and will be laid shortly. A press notice will be issued on the same day.

Museums (Merseyside)

Mr. Alton asked the Minister for the Arts if he will list the grants made by him to the national museums on Merseyside, and constituent institutions, in every year since their inception; and if he will break the figures down by whether they are for capital costs, operating costs, or for purchases.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 20 July 1987]: The trustee body for the national museums and galleries on Merseyside was formed on 20 February 1986 and was allocated a "setting up" grant of £18,000 in 1985-86.

In 1986-87 the NMGM was allocated allocated £10,145,000. Within this total, £7,995,000 was for running costs; £1,400,000 for the completion of the main contract for the Merseyside maritime museum; and £750,000 for purchase grant.

In 1987-88 the NMGM has been allocated £9,414,000 comprising £8,414,000 for running costs; £250,000 for capital works; and £750,000 for purchase grant.

It is for the trustee of the NMGM to decide how they will divide their grant amonst the constituent institutions.

Museums (Grants)

Mr. Alton asked the Minister for the Arts how much of his Department's expenditure on museums has been set aside for the replacement of the Greater London council and metropolitan authorities grants to museums in every year since the Greater London council and metropolitan authorities were abolished; which institutions have benefited; and by how much.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 20 July 1987]: On the abolition of the metropolitan county councils, the central Government arts programme took on the direct funding of two major museums: national museums and galleries on Merseyside, which were allocated a total grant-in-aid of £10·145 million in 1986-87 (including a special provision of £1·4 million for the completion of the Merseyside maritime museum project) and £9·414 million in 1987-88; and the Greater Manchester museum of science and industry which was allocated £1·075 million in 1986-87 and £1·252 million in 1987-88. The Government also increased from 33 per cent. to 50 per cent. their contribution towards the costs of the museum of London, a cash increase of £0·75 million in 1986-87 and £0·776 million in 1987-88.

Arrangements for assistance to certain other institutions were made by transfers to the appropriate funding agency in 1986-87. The University Grants Committee received £0·336 million for Manchester university's museum and the Whitworth gallery; the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission received £1·75 million for Kenwood house, Rangers house and Marble Hill house; and the Inner London education authority £1·361 million for the Geoffrye and Horniman museums.

Assistance to other museums and galleries in abolition areas is channelled through the Museums and Galleries Commission and disbursed as grants. With the exception of the Tyne and Wear museum service where longer term arrangements were appropriate, the commission has negotiated with each successor local authority an agreement whereby central Government support was 75 per cent. of metropolitan county council funding, uprated for inflation, in 1986-87, is 50 per cent. in 1987-88 and will be 25 per cent. in 1988-89 and nil thereafter. All the successor authorities have agreed to make up the funding to at least pre-abolition levels and some have exceeded these. Allocations for 1986-87 are as follows. Precise levels of funding to individual institutions for 1987-88 are still under discussion.

Museums and Galleries (Expenditure)

Mr. Alton asked the Minister for the Arts what the total expenditure by his Department on museums and galleries has been in every year since 1976-77; and within the totals, what sums have been allocated to (a) the national museums, (b) the Museums and Galleries Commission, and (c) the remainder.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 20 July 1987]: Expenditure by the Office of Arts and Libraries on museums and galleries since 1976-77 is as follows:

Notes:

(1) In 1984-85 responsibility and financial provision for local museum purchase grant funds was transferred from the Victoria and Albert and Science Museums to the Museums and Galleries Commission.

(2) Direct central government funding of the National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside and the Greater Manchester Museum of Science and Industry began on 1 April 1986 following the abolition of the GLC and MCCs. The central government contribution to the cost of the Museum of London increased from 33 per cent. to 50 per cent. Further central government funds were disbursed by the Museums and Galleries Commission as transitional grants to other museums and galleries in areas affected by abolition.

CIVIL SERVICE

Staff Statistics

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Minister for the Civil Service at what age, in general, officials are promoted to the rank of assistant secretary and senior principal, respectively; and from what ranks or grades, in general, these promotions are made.

Mr. Luce: As a means of simplifying and streamlining the Civil Service grading system, unified grading was introduced for most senior levels of the service in the early 1970s. Unified grading was extended to the assistant secretary and senior principal levels on 1 January 1984 and further extended on 1 January 1986 to principal level. Assistant secretary now forms part of unified grade 5, senior principal is included in unified grade 6 and principal in unified grade 7.

Promotions into grade 5 can be made from both grade 6 and grade 7 level. Promotion into grade 6 are made exclusively from grade 7. For the years 1984-86 the average age of those promoted into grade 5 was (i) from grade 6, 47 years and (ii) from grade 7, 39 years. For the same period, the average age of promotions into grade 6 from grade 7 was 45 years.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Hospital Admissions (Waltham Forest)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients from Waltham Forest seeking admission to St. Bartholomew's hospital since the beginning of the current year have been refused as a result of the new policy on catchment areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of the North-East Thames regional health authority, since information about decisions on referrals of patients from one health authority area to hospitals in another is not held centrally. It should, however, be noted that the guidance to general practitioners whose referrals from outside the City and Hackney health authority catchment area are not accepted is that the case for acceptance will be reassessed if the referring doctor considers this is warranted.

Balderton Hospital (Eastdale Unit)

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if a decision has yet been taken to close the Eastdale unit at Balderton hospital.

Mrs. Currie: No decisions have yet been taken. Any proposals would be subject to full local consultation in line with established procedures.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of extending exemption from prescription charges to all persons aged 60 years or over.

Mr. Newton: Women aged 60 or over and men 65 or over are already exempt from prescription charges. We estimate that it would cost in the region of £10 million to £15 million to extend exemption from prescription charges to men aged 60-64 who are not already exempt, for example, on low income or medical grounds.

AIDS

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements his Department has made to publicise the AIDS campaign in other languages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We are aware of the need to ensure that people who do not speak English have access to health education information about AIDS. Work is in hand to establish a "dial and listen" service in six Asian languages, and in simple English. The service will be run as an adjunct to the National Advisory Service on AIDS which we set up at the beginning of the year. This provides a free-call helpline, which I am pleased to announce will continue in operation at least until the end of March 1988.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards the siting of AIDS hospices or hostels in rural village communities.

Mr. Newton: This is a matter for decision by the individual agencies responsible in the light of local circumstances. Health authorities have this year been specifically requested to examine their provision of services for all terminally ill patients.

NHS (Staff Statistics)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the total National Health Service, establishment figures for each profession allied to medicine and actual variations from these figures for each of the last 10 years up until the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. However, chairmen of regional health authorities, at the request of the Pay Review Body covering this group of staff, have conducted sample surveys for the past three years. These indicate that the percentages of funded posts vacant for three months or more were as follows:

Percentage variations against funded posts

Profession	Sample years 1984	1985	1986
Chiropody	14·1	11·10	9·00
Dietetics	1·7	3·68	1·19

Orthoptics	1·5	1·58	0·93
Physiotherapy	4·5	3·50	0·94

Under-fives (Consultative Group)

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how often the inter-departmental consultative group on the under-fives has met since it came into being; and if he will make a statement on the conclusions reached;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a summary of the brief to the inter-departmental consultative group on the under-fives.

Mrs. Currie: The interdepartmental consultative group was set up in 1979 and has met 11 times, five of which were joint meetings with representatives of the local authority associations and the voluntary sector. Its terms of reference are "to provide a forum for interdepartmental discussion and co-ordination on provision for the under-fives in the field of community services".

The next meeting is planned for 12 October. Subjects discussed at the meetings include unregistered childminding, playgroups, research in the day care field, nursery education, services for under-fives from the ethnic communities, the implications of the Education Act 1981 for health authorities, the Manpower Services Commission's community programme and the under-fives initiative. We are satisfied that the group fulfils a useful purpose.

EEC (Social Workers)

Mr. Jim Lester asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of social workers in total and per hundred thousand population in each of the European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Newton: There were 30,700 field social workers (expressed as whole-time equivalents) employed by local authority social services departments in the United Kingdom in 1985, equivalent to 54 per 100,000 population. I regret that I am unable to supply corresponding information relating to other European Community countries.

Hospitals

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospitals of over 800 beds are (a) currently being built and (b) have been approved but not yet started.

Mrs. Currie: Information held centrally shows there are no hospitals with over 800 beds approved or under construction as discrete projects. There are, however, schemes approved at 12 existing hospitals and schemes under construction at nine more which will bring their total beds over 800.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the value of the land owned by Norwich health authority surrounding (a) the two hospitals at Thorpe St. Andrews and (b) the Hellesdon hospital.

Mrs. Currie: Estimates of the value of these sites depends on assumptions about the planning permissions that could be obtained and current market forces. The East Anglian regional health authority will be reassessing the range of potential values of these sites as part of the further site appraisal for the proposed second district general hospital in Norwich.

Ambulance Authorities (Orcon Standard)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which ambulance authorities failed to meet the Orcon standard for (a) emergency and (b) non-emergency calls in 1979 and 1986.

Mr. Newton: Regional and district health authorities are responsible for the day-to-day operational management and monitoring of National Health Service ambulance services, and I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Pensions Appeal Tribunal

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the procedure for implementing the decisions of the independent Pensions Appeal Tribunal when it finds against the Department's own assessment; and what is the normal length of time between the Tribunal's findings and the payment of the award.

Mr. Portillo: The tribunal notifies the decision to the Department within two to four weeks of the hearing. The Department's doctors consider it and advise on the medical aspects. Payment is calculated and aspects such as overlapping benefits are considered. The Department aims to make payment within two months of the hearing.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when the arrears of the increased award determined by the independent Pensions Appeal Tribunal on 24 June 1986, both at the 80 per cent. level for 1985-86 and at the 90 per cent. level for 1986-87 will be paid to Mr. J. F. Harding of 5 Undertown, Ugborough, Ivybridge, Devon; and if he will make a statement that Mr. Harding is now getting the pension which he was awarded by the independent Pensions Appeal Tribunal;

(2) what were the reasons for the delay in paying the increase awarded by the independent Pensions Appeal Tribunal against the Department's assessment of 60 per cent. to Mr. J. F. Harding of 5 Undertown, Ugborough, Ivybridge, Devon, from 24 June 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will set out the reasons why Mr. J. F. Harding of 5 Undertown, Ugborough, Ivybridge, Devon, has still not received the award of the independent Pensions Appeal Tribunal on 24 June 1986 for the 12 months previous to 24 June 1986.

Mr. Portillo: The Pensions Appeal Tribunal heard Mr. Harding's appeal on 13 March 1987. Regrettably, because of a clerical error, there were delays in implementing the tribunal's award. It is now in payment, and arrears were paid on 10 July 1987.

Community Care

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will give statistical details of the financial resources for care in the community made available by his Department to Leicestershire county council and the other organisations which jointly signed the letter to him dated 3 July; and what are the projected sums for the next three years.

Mrs. Currie: None of the general revenue funds or grants provided centrally to these organisations is specifically earmarked for community care. However, the personal social services allocation made for 1987-88 to Leicestershire county council included £92,000 in respect of schemes funded jointly with Leicestershire health authority. Trent regional health authority also allocates joint finance (capital and revenue) to Leicestershire health authority for community care and primary health care projects. I understand that a total of £1·894 million joint finance has been allocated to Leicestershire health authority for 1987-88 compared with £1·802 million for the previous year.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the Leicestershire county council, acting also on behalf of the Leicestershire health authority and others, about the level of resources available for community care in the county; and what reply he has sent.

Mrs. Currie: My right hon. Friend has received a letter dated 3 July, together with a document commenting on the care in the community initiative, signed by the chief executive of Leicestershire county council on behalf of the three political groups on the county council, the chairmen of Leicestershire health authority and Leicestershire family practitioner committee and one of the voluntary sector representatives on the county joint consultative committee. A reply will be sent shortly. I will ensure that the hon. Members whose constituencies cover Leicestershire receive a copy.

Ambulance Staff (Hepatitis)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make available to all ambulance men free vaccinations against hepatitis B.

Mrs. Currie: The Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI), which advises the Department on all aspects of immunisation, has considered revised proposals for amending its guidance on hepatitis B vaccination, and has referred them to its advisory group on hepatitis. We hope to be in a position to consider its recommendations, including any on ambulance staff, very shortly.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy in respect of the use of housing benefit in rental purchase schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The current housing benefits scheme provides help with payments under a rental purchase scheme for people on low incomes. The draft regulations for the reformed housing benefits scheme to be introduced in April 1988 carry forward existing arrangements.

Psittacosis

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the incidence of psittacosis in Cambridgeshire in comparison with the rest of Britain; if he will approve at the earliest opportunity the order of the South Cambridgeshire District Council making psittacosis a notifiable disease under section 16 of the Public Health (Control of Disease) Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Speech Therapists

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to bring the pay of speech therapists into parity with other graduate professions within the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: Pay is a matter for the Whitley Council. I understand that negotiations are in progress on the 1987 pay claim.

Overseas Voters

Mr William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total number of persons resident overseas registered to vote in the United Kingdom as at 11 June 1987 in each parliamentary constituency.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) on 15 July 1987 at column 523.

Fluoridation

Miss Widdecombe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Government have any information on the genetic effects of fluoride as used in water fluoridation.

Mrs. Currie: The Committee on Mutagenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment has recently considered the relevant evidence on genetic effects of fluoride in relation to the addition of fluoride to drinking water to a concentration of 1 milligram per litre including the results of recent research carried out in the United Kingdom. Its conclusions are as follows:

"There is evidence that prolonged exposure of cultured mammalian cells to sodium fluoride can cause mutations in these cells. Although the mechanism of action of fluoride is not understood, there is no chemical evidence to believe that fluoride reacts directly with DNA under physiologial conditions. On the contrary, there are indications that the action of fluoride is probably indirect and would not occur at low concentrations.

Such effects as have been observed in cultured mammalian cells occur at concentrations of fluoride considerably in excess of the plasma concentrations resulting from in vivo exposure to fluoride in water at 1 mg/l. All well-conducted in vivo mutagenicity tests are negative.

The Committee considers that there is sufficient evidence from the available data to conclude that the consumption of fluoridated water would not constitute a mutagenic hazard to man through the induction of heritable abnormalities in the gene cells.

The Committee has noted that the direct and extensive studies of human populations reviewed by the DHSS Working Party on Fluoridation and Cancer provide no sound evidence at all of an effect of fluoridation on cancer mortality and incidence rates, whether for cancer as a whole or for cancer at a large number of specific sites."

Cash Limits

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether there has been any change in the cash limits for his Department.

Mr. Scott: The latest provisional outturn for 1986-87 on class XV, vote 5 (Departmental Administration and Miscellaneous Services) is £1,178·698 million compared with a cash limit of £1,174·414 million. The overspend arose on capital expenditure on the Department's computerisation programme. The cash limit for 1987-88 will accordingly be reduced by £4·284 million from £1,347·252 million to £1,342·968 million. Improvements in expenditure control are being introduced as necessary.

Supplementary Benefit and Residential Care

Mr. Malins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the report of the Second Joint Working Party on supplementary benefit and residential care will be published.

Mr. Newton: The joint working party's report is being published today, as is the report of the associated pilot studies conducted by the university of York into the assessment of residents' care needs and of the reasonableness of the charges levied in homes. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The Government will not be seeking to reach conclusions on the joint working party's report in isolation, but will be considering it in the context of other studies, including te work of Lady Wagner's group on the role of residential care and Sir Roy Griffiths' wider examination of the use of resources in relation to community care. Meanwhile, we will welcome views from interested parties and the public about the options identified by the working party.

Research (Priorities)

Mrs. Gillian Shephard asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are his Department's priorities for research in the fields of health, personal social services and social security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The research programmes supported by the Department contribute to the efficiency and effectiveness of the health and social services by promoting improvements in organisation, operation and administration.

Bearing in mind the primary responsibility of the Medical Research Council for biomedical research, I have concluded that the health and personal social services programme should be concentrated on the following areas, which are set out in order of priority:

- acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS);
- the demands on, and effectiveness of, acute sector services;
- the transition to community care;
- consumer attitudes to the health and personal social services;
- the influencing of lifestyles, for example in relation to drug abuse;
- professional manpower.

Social security research will concentrate on the transition to community care; evaluation of the effectiveness of social programmes.

These priorities will govern the commissioning of research projects in 1987-88 and the continuation of some existing projects. They will be kept under review.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants received exceptionally severe weather payments at each benefit office in each constituency of Scotland in the winter of 1986-87; and how much was paid out at each office.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1987, c. 313]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Figures are available on the number of £5 payments but not the number of individuals receiving payment. The great majority of successful claimants will have received £5 in respect of each week for which help was available in their area.

SCOTLAND

Sea Angling

12. Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what he is doing to encourage sea angling as a tourist attraction in the Firth of Clyde; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Government encourage sea angling as a tourist attraction in the Clyde and elsewhere through the Scottish Tourist Board and the Highlands and Islands Development Board. Assistance includes grants towards the purchase of vessels and equipment and annual publications giving sea angling information.

Rate Support Grant

13. Mr. Ingram asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to increase the percentage level of rate support grant paid by his Department to Scottish local authorities in the next financial year.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to make an announcement very soon about expenditure provision and grant for Scottish local authorities in 1988-89.

40. Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will be meeting the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss the rate support grant settlement for next year.

Mr. Rifkind: I will be meeting the convention on Monday 12 October and Friday 4 December to complete my consultations with it on rate support grant for 1988-89.

Scottish Assembly

14. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals for constitutional changes in Scotland arising from the result of the June 1987 general election.

15. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now introduce legislation to create a directly elected Scottish Assembly.

19. Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he is considering on the reform of the structure of Scottish government.

38. Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will hold discussions with a view to setting up a Scottish Assembly with legislative powers.

53. Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will hold discussions with a view to setting up a Scottish Assembly with legislative powers.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I have today given to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Doran).

35. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the number of representations he has received regarding the setting up of an Assembly in Edinburgh.

47. Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received in the past month urging him to establish a directly elected Scottish Assembly.

Mr. Rifkind: Over the last month there have been just over 50 letters, almost all from members of the public, on this subject. Slightly more than half of them urge me to set up a Scottish Assembly; just under half urge me not to do so.

36. Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will appoint a commission consisting of representatives of all the Scottish political parties together with the Scottish Trades Union Congress, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the Confederation of British Industry, and so on, to consider the case for the creation of a directly elected Scottish Assembly.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

44. Mr. Galloway asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to take steps to ascertain the level of public support in Scotland for the creation of a directly elected Scottish Assembly.

46. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to make arrangements to ascertain the level of public support in Scotland for the creation of a directly elected Scottish Assembly.

Mr. Rifkind: I have no plans to take any such steps. During the election campaign I formed a clear impression of the priority which the people of Scotland attach to this issue.

Industrial Support

16. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent on industrial support in Scotland since 1983.

Mr. Lang: Expenditure on regional assistance in Scotland between 1983-84 and 1986-87 was £854 million. Industry also received support, either directly or indirectly, from other Government programmes.

Caterpillar Tractor Working Party

18. Mr. Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what meetings his officials have had with the Caterpillar Tractor working party; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Senior officials of the Industry Department have attended all the meetings of the working party. I myself had a helpful meeting with representatives of the working party last week.

Efforts are continuing to seek alternative employment opportunities for the Caterpillar work force. The help and support of all those on the working party are likely to prove most valuable.

Economic Prospects

20. Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the fall in unemployment in Scotland over the last three months and its effect on the Scottish economy.

Mr. Rifkind: Over the last three months, seasonally adjusted unemployment in Scotland has fallen by 10,200 and is now at its lowest level since the end of 1985. More generally, survey evidence suggests rising economic activity in Scotland this year.

48. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to make an official visit to Greenock and Port Glasgow in the near future to discuss the prospects for the local economy.

Mr. Rifkind: I have no plans for such a visit at present.

Highlands and Islands Development Board

21. Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether in considering the appointment of a new member of the Highlands and Islands Development Board, he will give particular weight to knowledge and experience of, and connection with, the area.

Mr. Lang: The prime requirements for the appointment are managerial, financial and presentational skills, my right hon. and learned Friend will give particular consideration to candidates for board membership who combine these skills with a knowledge and understanding of the area. A varied experience of rural and small business would also be considered to be helpful.

Extradition

22. Mr. Rees asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria the Lord Advocate uses in deciding whether to accede to a formal request for assistance in procuring the extradition from Scotland of a suspected criminal; and whether any different criteria apply to suspected war criminals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The criteria applied in all extradition cases are those provided in the Extradition Acts 1870 to 1935 and the Fugitive Offenders Act 1967.

Universities Funding Council

23. Mr. Buchanan-Smith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had with educational bodies in Scotland regarding the membership of the Scottish committee of the proposed Universities Funding Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Education and Science, has issued a consultation paper on the Universities Funding Council. I have seen the responses made by the Standing Committee of the Scottish Universities on behalf of all the Scottish universities, by the Joint Committee of Principals of Colleges of Education and the Principals and Directors of Central Institutions, and by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

"Scottish Homes" (Consultation Period)

24. Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will extend the consultation period for consideration of his Department's document "Scottish Homes"; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. We have allowed nearly four months, to 31 August, for comments to be offered on our proposals for Scottish homes and we wish to make early progress, taking account of such comments.

Forestry

25. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he expects to make in regard to forestry policy in the United Kingdom during the next five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Forestry policy will continue to be reviewed from time to time. However, I cannot anticipate the outcome of any future reviews.

34. Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to increase afforestation in the United Kingdom in order to reduce reliance on imported timber and encourage diversification in the rural economy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As announced to the House by my right hon. Friend, the Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Jopling), on 9 February 1987, at column 70, the target for new forestry planting has been raised to 33,000 hectares a year, and planting is being encouraged through the grant schemes administered by the Forestry Commission and the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland. My right hon. Friend also announced the intention to introduce a farm woodland scheme to encourage farmers to plant trees on some of their land.

Rating Reform

26. Mrs. Margaret Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on current progress being made towards the implementation of the community charge in 1989.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend will shortly make a commencement order bringing into force the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987. Regulations will then be made covering the detailed operation of the new system in good time for the necessary preparatory work to be undertaken by local authorities for the introduction of the system on 1 April 1989.

27. Mr. McAvoy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what he expects will be the cost to Scottish local authorities in compiling the community charge register in the first year in which it will be operational.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend estimates that expenditure of up to £9 million will be necessary in 1988-89 on the establishment of the register and the preparation of new billing and collection systems.

Mr. McFall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the maximum level of rebate available to the unemployed and to the low paid under the community charge system.

Mr. Lang: The community charge rebate scheme will follow closely the revised arrangements for rate rebates which will be introduced in April 1988 under the provisions of the Social Security Act 1986. The draft housing benefit regulations recently circulated to local authorities confirm that, to promote accountability, the Government expect everyone who is liable to pay domestic rates to make a minimum contribution of 20 per cent. of their rates bill: the maximum rebate will therefore be 80 per cent.

In setting income support levels from 1 April 1988 under the new social security arrangements, the Government will take the minimum contribution to rates into account. Similar principles will apply to the community charge.

31. Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will delay introduction of the poll tax until such time as parallel legislation is on the statute book for England and Wales.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend expects that the legislation establishing a community charge system for England and Wales will have been passed by Parliament well before the system is introduced in Scotland on 1 April 1989.

49. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss the setting up of arrangements to collect the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have consistently made clear my willingness to have consultations with the convention about the legislation.

54. Mr. Hood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received from Scottish local authorities (a) supporting and (b) opposing the introduction of the community charge as a replacement for domestic rates.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and from 39 individual local authorities on rating reform since the publication of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714). While most local authorities oppose the community charge system in principle, many representations include comments in favour of some of the proposals and against others. It is not therefore possible to provide the information in precisely the form requested.

55. Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the impact of the Abolition of Domestic Rates, Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 on crofters and peripheral rural areas.

Mr. Lang: The impact of our proposals will depend on individual and household circumstances. It is not therefore appropriate to make any general assessment of their impact on these groups whose circumstances will vary widely. Rebates will be available for those on low incomes who would otherwise have difficulty in meeting their full community charge liability.

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many extra staff he estimates local authorities will need to employ to implement the poll tax legislation in 1989; and at what cost.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend estimates that expenditure of up to £9 million will be necessary in 1988-89 on the establishment of the register and preparation of new billing and collection systems for the community charge in Scotland. He also estimates that the total additional cost to local authorities in running the system from 1 April 1989 onwards will be in the range of £17 to £22 million per year. It will be for individual local authorities to consider the manpower implications of the plans for their own areas.

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss the administrative and financial arrangements for the implementation of the Abolition of Domestic Rates etc. (Scotland) Act.

Mr. Rifkind: I have consistently made clear my willingness to have consultations with the convention about the legislation.

Scottish Development Agency

30. Mr. McLeish asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to increase the budget of the Scottish Development Agency.

Mr. Lang: The agency's gross provision for 1987-88 is expected to be £136 million which continues the real terms increase trend in the agency's budget since this Government came to office. This is a sizeable budget and one which reflects the Government"s commitment to the agency as its main instrument of economic and environmental regeneration in Scotland.

Scottish Rural Development Agency

32. Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received proposing a Scottish Rural Development Agency.

Mr. Rifkind: None. The Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board already have a wide range or powers to assist the development of rural areas throughout Scotland.

NHS (Expenditure)

33. Mr. Forth asked the Secretaty of State for Scotland if he will give the figures of National Health Service per capita expenditure for Scotland for the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the current financial year gross expenditure of £2,307 million is planned on the National Health Service in Scotland; this represents per capita expenditure of £450, a figure 23 per cent. higher than that for England. Scotland has 39 per cent. more health staff and 59 per cent. more hospital beds measured by population.

Ravenscraig Steelworks

37. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of Ravenscraig steelworks.

Mr. Lang: Ravenscraig's assured operation up to at least August 1988 is part of the strategy for the British Steel Corporation agreed in 1985. The future of Ravenscraig cannot be considered in isolation from the determination of future strategy for BSC as a whole, and it is too early to reach decisions on this.

Woodilee Hospital

39. Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost to date of the recent emergency evacuation of Woodilee hospital; and if he will hold a public inquiry into this matter.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Costs of £110,000 were incurred during the evacuation of the main block at Woodilee hospital in March. Since then the Greater Glasgow health board has incurred additional revenue expenditure of about £16,000 per week in providing in-patient services at the hospitals to which the patients have been transferred, where the board has already incurred capital expenditure of £170,000 on improvements and has decided to spend another £260,000 on further upgrading work. The board is currently considering the options for the longer term. I see no need for a public inquiry.

Trunk Roads

41. Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the proposed trunk road construction projects which will affect traffic in the Eastwood constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is responsible only for trunk road projects. The one such project which will directly affect traffic in the Eastwood constituency is the section of the proposed Ayr road route (A77) between the former Glasgow city boundary and Malletsheugh.

Court of Session and High Court of Justiciary

42. Mr. Menzies Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for the more speedy conduct of business in the Court of Session and the High Court of Justiciary.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The report of the review body on the use of judicial time in the superior courts in Scotland, chaired by Lord Maxwell, which was published on 18 July 1986, made a number of recommendations aimed at securing the speedy disposal of business in the supreme courts. The recommendations mainly fell within the responsibility of the Lord President of the Court of Session, and must have been or are being implemented. The Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1987 introduces a simplified procedure for arranging sittings of the High Court of Justiciary and increases the sentencing powers of a sheriff in solemn proceedings. In addition, the Maximum Number of Judges (Scotland) Order 1986 increased the number of judges from 23 to 24. All of these measures should help to improve the disposal of business in the supreme courts.

Borders Region

45. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now undertake a review of the development status of the Borders region.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to review the assisted area status of Borders region.

Employment Prospects

50. Mr. Darling asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on employment prospects in Edinburgh over the next five years.

Mr. Lang: Employment prospects in Edinburgh, as elsewhere, are dependent upon continued economic growth, industrial competitiveness and pay restraint. Unemployment in the Edinburgh travel-to-work area is well below the Scottish level for both males and females and is falling. I note the importance for Edinburgh of developments in electronics and other manufacturing sectors and also the service sector, in particular financial and business services, and tourism.

Housing Associations

51. Mr. Malcolm Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses have been built or acquired by housing associations in Gordon and Aberdeen districts over the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Over the five years to 31 March 1987, 535 houses have been acquired by housing associations in Aberdeen district and 60 in Gordon district. Over the same period, 603 homes have been completed (either by new construction or by rehabilitation) in Aberdeen district and 182 in Gordon district.

School Meals

52. Mrs. Fyfe asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take to protect the nutritional standards of school meals in the event of the service being taken over by private contractors.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The nutritional content of school meals is a matter for the individual education authority. Under the Government's proposals for competitive tendering, education authorities would be obliged to submit their in-house operation to outside competition, on a comparable basis. It would be for the authority to stipulate, in the tendering process, the nature and quality of the service it wished to maintain and to monitor the performance of the chosen contractor.

Fish Farming

28. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he proposes to take further to promote the development of fish farming in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The industry has grown spectacularly in recent years with for example the added value of farmed salmon to the economy in 1987 estimated at £60 million. Government assistance at 1986 prices amounts to some £26 million to date and is continuing.

Orthopaedic Waiting Lists

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) to what factors he attributes the difference in orthopaedic waiting lists between 494 days in Fife and 53 days in Argyll and Clyde; and what action he is taking to reduce these differences;

(2) to what factors he attributes the large variation in orthopaedic waiting times in the same health boards in Scotland; and what action he is taking to reduce these differences.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Waiting times in different areas and specialties will inevitably vary, for a wide variety of reasons. Because of this it is difficult to reach any firm conclusion when comparing the waiting times of patients in different board areas particularly in respect of one single specialty taken in isolation. Health boards are ultimately responsible for managing waiting lists and from their knowledge of local needs, they decide on priorities in the provision of services. I am exploring possible courses of action to assist in the reduction of waiting times.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the National Health Service per capita expenditure for each of the health boards in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information for 1985-86 is as follows:

Health Board	Per capita (£)
Argyll and Clyde	296·98
Ayrshire and Arran	274·41
Borders	284·82
Dumfries and Galloway	328·70
Fife	269·02
Forth Valley	321·47
Grampian	319·26
Greater Glasgow	460·55
Highland	347·89
Lanarkshire	275·16
Lothian	373·51
Orkney	279·26
Shetland	274·83
Tayside	409·10
Western Isles	313·36
Scotland	347·64

Note:
The expenditure figures used are taken from the annual accounts submitted to the Department by health boards and are net of charges retained by family practitioners.

Surgical Operations (Statistics)

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of operations done in each surgical specialty in each hospital in Scotland in 1985.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the tables:

Out-patients

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the total average waiting time for a new out-patient attendance in each surgical specialty in each hospital in Scotland in 1985.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

NHS (Consultants)

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of whole-time and the number of part-time consultants in each surgical specialty in each hospital in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The precise current distribution of consultant staff in each surgical specialty in each hospital in Scotland is not known centrally. Information about consultant manpower by speciality and health board is published in "Scottish Health Statistics" a copy of which is held in the Library.

Women

Mrs. Fyfe asked the Secretary of State for Scotland who is his Department's representative on the transdepartmental group set up by the Prime Minister to look at the forward-looking strategies which came out of the United Nations decade for women; and when this group will report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I represent the Scottish Office on the ministerial group on women's issues. The group has reviewed the Nairobi forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women. A copy of the review, which was published on 30 April, has been placed in the Library.

Machinery of Government

Mr. Salmond asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to consult bodies in Scotland on the machinery of government.

Mr. Rifkind: I have no plans at present.

Regional Councils

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures to show the trend in real terms over the last five years of Strathclyde's share of the resources allocated to regional councils; if he will also provide a table showing regional councils in descending order according to their level of deprivation, as measured by his Department's criteria; and if he will indicate how deprivation levels influence decisions on the allocation of resources to individual regional councils.

Mr. Lang: Strathclyde's share of the resources available to regional councils over the last five years is set out in table A below. Table B shows the ranking of the regional councils in terms of area deprivation. Aspects of social deprivation are taken into account in the assessment of authorities' relative expenditure need, which is undertaken in consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, and which underlies the calculation of current expenditure guidelines.

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria are used to determine the allocation of capital funds to Scottish regional councils; what amount Strathclyde regional council has received in each of the last five years; and how these figures compare pro rata with other regional councils.

Mr. Lang: In determining the allocation of resources for capital expenditure by local authorities, careful consideration is given to the relative needs of authorities, as expressed in their financial plans. In assessing relative needs, account is taken of a number of factors, which may vary according to the nature of the proposed expenditure. The figures requested are set out in the table.

(1) The table is based on final allocations, plus any supplementary allocations, and specific consents (eg urban programme, civil defence) but does not take account of enhancements/abatements to allocations as a result of underspends/overspends in the previous year.
(2) The figures for 1983-84 and 1984-85 do not include an allowance for capital financed from current revenue.
(3) The table covers allocations for the roads and transport, water and sewerage, social work, education, general services, police, urban aid and civil defence programmes. In the case of police, account has been taken of allocations to joint police boards.

Regional Services (Strathclyde)

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures to show for each regional service what account is taken in the calculation of (a) rate support grant and (b) his guideline figures for Strathclyde of its obligations to provide services to meet national and European Economic Community standards as well as national pay awards and agreements.

Mr. Lang: Each local authority's guideline is constructed on the basis of assessments of its relative expenditure need for each service. These assessments are based on total provision for local authority current expenditure and the allocation of that provision to services. These are determined taking account of all relevant factors, including nationally or internationally determined standards of service where they apply, and the costs including wage costs of providing the service. It is not possible to identify elements of provision or of assessed need attributable directly to these factors. Rate support grant is paid in support of a local authority's expenditure generally, and is not attributable to particular items of expenditure.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage share of National Health Service costs allocated to the Scottish ambulance service; and how this compares with percentage expenditure in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Scottish Special Housing Association

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is proposed for the future of the Scottish Special Housing Association housing in Renfrew, West and Inverclyde constituency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Insofar as the proposals contained in the consultative document "Scottish Homes: A New Agency for Housing in Scotland" concern Scottish Special Housing Association housing, they include such houses in the hon. Member's constituency.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the purpose of the public meetings organised by the Scottish Special Housing Association for its tenants; and what say the tenants will have on the future of their houses when the consultation is completed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand that the association has arranged some meetings with tenants in response to their inquiries about the proposals in the consultative document "Scottish Homes: A New Agency for Housing in Scotland". The association is holding a conference on this subject for representatives of tenants' associations on 15 August. The chairman of the association wrote on 14 July to all tenants and said that the association would receive and let the Government know about views expressed by tenants. My right hon. and learned Friend will, of course, take full account of all comments submitted to him.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish Special Housing Association will be meeting the Renfrew district council and the Inverclyde district council to discuss what will happen to the Association's local agreement in relation to housing local people.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for the bodies themselves to determine whether they hold any meetings. The association's agreement with these and other district councils about the allocation of the association's houses will be taken into account in our consideration of the proposals for "Scottish Homes".

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish Special Housing Association will be informing hon. Members with Scottish Special Housing Association houses in their constituencies about the consultations that are taking place with local groups about the proposals entitled "Scottish Homes".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is a matter for the Scottish Special Housing Association to decide.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if the tenants of the Scottish Special Housing Association will be balloted on whether they want their district council to take them over; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the tenants of the Scottish Special Housing Association will be asked whether they want their local district councils to take over and run their houses as district council houses; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. Our proposals for the future of Scottish Special Housing Association houses are contained in the consultative document "Scottish Homes: A New Agency for Housing in Scotland" and we shall take full account of comments made by association tenants on these proposals.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the local hon. Members and district councillors who have Scottish Special Housing Association houses in their areas will be consulted about the proposals to abolish the Scottish Special Housing Association.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Copies of the consultation document "Scottish Homes: A New Agency for Housing in Scotland" were placed in the Library and sent to all district councils on 7 May. It is for hon. Members and district councillors to decide whether they wish to comment on the proposals which include the replacement of the association by the new agency.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish Special Housing Association houses there are in the Renfrew, West and Inverclyde constituency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally. At 30 September 1986, there were 7,429 and 3,288 SSHA dwellings in Renfrew and Inverclyde district council areas respectively.

Mr. Graham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what has been the level of rent rises in Scottish Special Housing Association houses in each year since 1979;

(2) what information he has about the average rent of a four-apartment, three-apartment and five-apartment terraced house and flat, respectively, owned by the Scottish Special Housing Association in the Renfrew, West and Inverclyde constituency; and what is the average rent in Scotland as a whole for Scottish Special Housing Association houses;

(3) what information he has about the average rents of Renfrew district council's five, four and three apartment terraced houses and flats, respectively; and what are the figures for Inverclyde district council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Separate information on average rents for terraced houses and for flats is not collected centrally. Average annual rents for local authority and SSHA dwellings by apartment size at 30 September 1986 and rent increases nationally are detailed in Scottish Development Department statistical bulletin HSIU No. 29: "Public Sector Rents 1986-87," a copy of which has recently been sent to all hon. Members with Scottish constituencies.

War Criminals (Extradition)

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many requests have been received by the Lord Advocate since 1957 for assistance in procuring the extradition from Scotland of suspected war criminals; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None, so far as can be ascertained. Any such request would be treated on its merits in accordance with extradition law.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state (a) the number and grades of staff in post and (b) the (i) sentence, (ii) security and (iii) offence categories of prisoners held at Her Majesty's prison Peterhead on 31 December 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: (a) The number and grades of staff in post at Her Majesty's prison Peterhead on 1 January 1987 are given in the table. 1 January is the nearest date to that requested for which the information is available.

Teachers

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate the number of newly qualified secondary teachers who will not be able to find teaching jobs in the forthcoming school year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information on which such an estimate would be based is not held centrally.

Gary MacGregor (Death)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received recent representations seeking an inquiry into the death of Gary MacGregor; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamiliton: I have received a request for an inquiry from Mr. David Martin, MEP. The circumstances of this death were fully investigated by the procurator fiscal and reported to Crown counsel, who instructed criminal proceedings against the driver of the police vehicle involved for a contravention of section 3 of the Road Traffic Act 1972. All relevant available evidence concerning the accident was placed before the court in the criminal trial on 11 March 1985 when the driver was acquitted. Since the circumstances of the death have been sufficiently established in the course of the trial, Crown counsel did not consider it appropriate or necessary in the public interest to hold a fatal accident inquiry.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 (Management Agreements)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, if, in relation to the operation in Scotland of the guidelines for management agreements under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, he will list the recommendations and proposals made by the Government's consultants for the avoidance of over-compensation; and if he will specify in each case the action taken to implement them.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply.

Details of the consultant's recommendations and proposals designed to improve the accuracy and reliability of payments under management agreements may be found on pages 60-64 and 102-106 of the consultant's report, a copy of which has been deposited in the Library. The Government's preliminary views on these are set out in full in the consultation paper published on 8 Aprl 1987, which has also been deposited in the Library and distributed to interested parties.

We are currently considering the responses to the consultation exercise and will make an announcement in due course.

ENVIRONMENT

Litter

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will report on the progress of the anti-litter campaign and in particular on the work of Mr. Richard Branson in this respect.

Mr. Trippier: UK2000, under Mr. Richard Branson's chairmanship, is now undertaking practical work to improve the environment. A part of this work involves action to tackle litter, but it includes many other types of project.

At the end of June UK2000 had 214 projects under way. A total of 3,900 community programme workers and 7,000 volunteers worked on these projects. Nearly £750,000 private sector sponsorship in cash and kind has been attracted. UK2000 seeks to ensure that projects are of high quality and that goood training and work experience is offered to participants.

The priorities for UK2000 as it enters its second year are to develop more innovative and major environmental projects and to explore the potential for creating new enterprises from environmental improvement.

Rating Reform

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how the Government intend to adapt to the proposed community charge in the principle of rate relief for disabled people who have special provisions in their homes on account of their disabilities.

Mr. Howard: Under the domestic rating system rateable values are increased to take account of extensions and alterations of property. Rate relief is granted to disabled people to ensure that they do not have to pay high bills as a result of modifications needed to their homes as a result of their disabilities.

This problem will not arise with the community charge, because improvements to people's homes will not affect the level of the charge.

Flats (Disabled People)

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans exist to introduce common parts grants for adaptations to the communal areas of blocks of flats to meet the needs of disabled residents.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Housing and Planning Act 1986 includes provisions for a new discretionary grant for the common parts of blocks of flats, including work required to make them suitable for use by a disabled occupant of a dwelling. The local authority associations are now being consulted about the subordinate legislation needed to implement the grant provisions. I expect the necessary statutory instruments to be laid before Parliament later this year.

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice or guidance is available from his Department to local authorities on considering the requirements of disabled people when modernising old council housing.

Mrs. Roe: The Department has published a number of circulars and other forms of guidance on the housing requirements of disabled people. These include:

- Circular 74/74 "Housing for People who are Physically handicapped";
- Circular 59/78 "Adaptations of Housing for People who are Physically handicapped";
- design guidance on mobility housing and wheelchair housing (Housing Development Directorate Occasional Papers 2/74 and 2/75);
- advice on housing services for disabled people (HDD Occasional Paper 3/78);
- 1984 guidance manual on advice booklets produced by local authorities for disabled people;
- a comprehensive film and information pack "Housing for the Disabled" (1981); and
- a manual on house adaptations for disabled people to be published soon by HMSO.

Empty Houses and Flats

Mr. Redwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 district or borough councils with the largest number of empty houses and flats, including on the list the total number of houses and flats in each council's ownership and the proportion unoccupied.

Mr. Waldegrave: The 10 English local authorities reporting most vacant dwellings at April 1986 provided the following information in their 1986 housing investment programme returns.

Local Authority Stock[1] at 1 April 1986

	Vacant[2] dwellings	Total stock	Percentage vacant
Liverpool	7,704	64,836	11·9
Manchester	4,939	79,499	6·2
Sheffield	3,277	89,994	3·6
Tower Hamlets	3,200	48,700	6·6
Hackney	3,111	45,730	6·8
Birmingham	3,106	120,955	2·6
Sandwell	2,751	55,787	4·9
Newham	2,420	31,110	7·8
Islington	2,271	41,261	5·5
Bradford	2,117	37,082	5·7

[1] Housing owned by the local authority within its own area.
[2] Includes dwellings awaiting demolition.

Derelict and Unused Land

Mr. Redwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 largest public owners of derelict and unused land by acreage, together with the acreage held by each.

Mr. Trippier: The registers of unused and under-used land owned by public bodies compiled under part X of the Local Government Planning Land Act 1980 contain details of parcels of land larger than one acre in size (a few sites smaller than this have been entered at public request). The 10 public bodies with the largest areas of land currently entered on the registers are:

	Acreage
1. British Rail	9,339
2. Central Electricity Generating Board	3,258
3. Warrington Development Corporation	2,123
4. National Coal Board	2,011
5. Telford Development Corporation	1,989
6. Commission for New Towns	1,712
7. British Steel Corporation	1,358
8. Kent County Council	1,345
9. Tyne and Wear County Council	1,319
10. Leeds City Council	1,233

Council Housing (Rehabilitation)

Mr. Redwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the four most extensive council flats rehabilitation projects that have used private capital, along with the amounts of money invested, the number of units improved, and the ultimate form of tenure of the rehabilitated houses.

Mr. Waldegrave: We do not have this information. My Department assembles details about the numbers of empty local authority dwellings disposed of to the private sector and I included the most recent list in our answer to the hon. Member for Bootle on 13 July 1987 at column 387. This list is not necessarily comprehensive however, since local authorities are not required to seek the Secretary of State's consent or to inform the Department when they are disposing of empty housing at the best price.

My Department's estate action team has produced a booklet "New Homes from Old" which gives details of a range of schemes whereby empty rundown council housing has been successfully transformed by using private capital. I have written to my hon. Friend enclosing a copy.

Richmond Dock Shipyard Site, Appledore

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in respect of alleged irregularities in the granting of planning consent for the redevelopment of the Richmond dock shipyard site, Appledore, Devon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: A number of telephone calls from a local councillor have been received by my Department's regional office. I understand the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission has received correspondence from the same councillor. It is for the local planning authority to make a decision about the applications.

Warrington and Runcorn Development Corporation

Mr. Butler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now set a target date for the winding-up of Warrington and Runcorn development corporation.

Mrs. Roe: In December last year the relevant local authorities were consulted on a proposal to wind up the Warrington and Runcorn development corporation on 30 September 1989. I have considered the responses to that consultation and I have decided to confirm that date as the target for wind-up. The final decision and formal order will be made in the usual way nearer the time, after the statutory consultations required under the New Towns Act 1981 have been undertaken. I am still considering what further development the development corporation should promote before September 1989.

Banqueting House, Whitehall

Mrs. Gorman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make the banqueting house, Whitehall, available more widely for functions.

Mr. Moynihan: We have recently reviewed the criteria for the use of the banqueting house and have decided to extend the privilege of holding functions there to a wider group of suitable organisations, including for a trial period reputable private companies. Any function must be in keeping with the dignity and traditions of the banqueting house, which has the status of a royal palace, and will not interfere with the normal daytime admission of the public. Applications will now be considered in respect of:

(a) Receptions and dinners held by the Government, Government agencies, local government organisations, individual local authorities and other reputable public bodies; Foreign and Commonwealth Government receptions and dinners.
(b) Registered charities of a national character, normally on distinctive occasions, for fund-raising or other appropriate activities.
(c) Receptions or dinners, by non-profit making commercial and industrial organisations for the promotion of export trade or other suitable purposes.
(d) Functions organised by professional institutions.
(e) Cultural and learned events, such as lectures and concerts.
(f) Receptions and dinners given by reputable private companies, but not to promote products or services.

(g) Functions associated with bookings at the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre.

Permission to use the banqueting house will be at the absolute discretion of the Department of the Environment. All functions will take place in the evenings except concerts and lectures which may be permitted in the day-time provided that the banqueting house can remain open to the general public.

Appropriate charges for the use of the hall will be preferred.

The following events will still not be acceptable:

(i) dances
(ii) party political or politically controversial gatherings
(iii) use by private individuals, except in very exceptional circumstances.

Local Authority Fees and Charges

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the review of local authority fees and charges.

Mr. Ridley: In the light of the review, the Government have decided to provide an enabling power in primary legislation, allowing new or amended charging powers to be introduced by order. The Government consider that allowing new charging powers to be introduced in secondary legislation in this way will give central and local government more flexibility to respond to changing circumstances.

The enabling power will also allow the level of fees and charges under existing, new or amended charging powers to be prescribed or varied.

The enabling power will not be exercisable in respect of certain functions and services, including school education, policing, firefighting and elections. In addition there are many areas in respect of which the enabling power will formally be exercisable, but to which the Department has no plans to introduce or extend charging powers. These include basic public library services and household waste collection.

Albert Memorial

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the likely cost of restoring the Albert Memorial; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [pursuant to his answer, 21 July 1987]: The cost of restoration or other treatment will depend on the option chosen. So far no decision about this has been made.

St. George's Hospital Building

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how long the St. George's hospital building, Hyde Park corner, has been unoccupied; what initiatives he will take to ensure this grade II building is adequately protected from any further deterioration which might necessitate its demolition; and what further initiatives he will take to ensure this building will be restored to its original design.

Mr. Moynihan [pursuant to his reply, 21 July 1987]: The former St. George's hospital consists of a group of early 19th century Grade II and Grade II* listed buildings which were vacated by DHSS in mid-1980. Following an approach by Westminster city council, which has powers to serve a repairs notice on the owners, stabilisation work is being carried out. The city council is monitoring this work and the Secretary of State is satisfied that this aspect can safely be left in their hands.

Proposals for development are currently under consideration. If any demolition of a listed building is involved, the applications will be referred to the Secretary of State to decide whether to intervene.

Mersey Basin Programme

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will approach the European Commission to seek a change in the financing of environmental improvement works under the Mersey basin programme.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has recently negotiated a more flexible interpretation of the rules relating to environmental improvement works within national programmes of community interest. This will be of benefit to the Mersey basin programme.

Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now take steps to consult relevant local authorities about Her Majesty's Government's submission to the European Commission of phase 2 of the Mersey basin programme; why no consultation has taken place so far; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Consultation had in fact been under way since November 1986 through the three local authority-led Project Groups of the Mersey Basin Campaign, though the Department has receved only 15 responses from individual local authorities and other public bodies, including Wigan MBC. This together with information held centrally, has been sufficient to build up a satisfactory submission to the European Commission. I hope for a favourable response at about the end of this year.

Defence Materials and Equipment (Bolton)

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is given by his Department to local authorities and police; and what is the required notification to him of cargoes of defence materials and equipment parked overnight in Bolton.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, the hon. Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman).

Non-domestic Rates

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority the amount to be received from non-domestic rates in 1987-88, showing also what each authority would receive in 1987-88 from a national non-domestic rate poundage of 224·1 pence.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed in the Library figures showing the estimated non-domestic rates to be received by rating authorities in 1987-88.

The hon. Gentleman is seeking to make a false comparison. Under the proposals in Cmnd. 9714 authorities would receive £233·1 per adult as a result of a uniform domestic rate of 224·1p. This figures is not comparable with the income from non-domestic rates under the present arrangements which provide for inequalities in rateable value to be mitigated by adjustments to block grant.

Land and Buildings (Sales)

Mrs. Gorman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total sales, in pounds sterling, of land and buildings disposed of by local and central Government in the years: 1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information about receipts from the sale by local government of land and buildings is not separately available. Receipts from the sale of fixed assets (including land and buildings) are as follows:

1978-79	194·659
1979-80	304·030
1980-81	406·322
1981-82	866·650
1982-83	1,461·861
1983-84	1,412·817
1984-85	1,447·617
1985-86	1,628·624
1986-87	[1]1,950·000

[1] Estimated figure.

The Property Services Agency falls within my responsibility. Sales of land and buildings by it for the defence and common user civil estates are as follows:

£ million

Year	Defence	Civil
1979-80	50·0	8
1980-81	65·0	18
1981-82	54·6	9
1982-83	41·0	20
1983-84	42·0	10
1984-85	28·0	14
1985-86	60·0	29
1986-87	75·0	41

Fire Engines and Ambulances (Hooters)

Mr. Summerson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the typical decibel level of hooters on fire engines and ambulances; and what assessment his Department has made as to whether they can be made less noisy while remaining effective in clearing the road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

About 115 decibels at 2m. Chief fire officers and chief ambulance officers decide what type of signal best suits their operational needs. The Department has made no assessment of the kind described.

TRANSPORT

Roads

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state total expenditure on roads (a) in England and (b) in Scotland, for each of the last eight years; and how much per head of population this represents in each case.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is a follows:

Roads Expenditure (£ million cash)

	[1]Total	[2]Per Capita	[1]Total	[2]Per Capita
1979-80	1,322	28	261	52

[1] To nearest £ million.
[2] To nearest £.
[3] (Provisional)

Comparable figures have been given for Scotland as requested. Expenditure on roads in Scotland is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is responsible for roads in England.

Woodford-Barking Relief Road

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects the Woodford-Barking relief road to be opened.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The relief road should be fully open to traffic by early next year.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Channon: Figures are not available for industrial staff. A full answer for non-industrials would be excessively long, so it has been summarised into standard groups of grades as follows:

A1-M1 (Thrapston Bypass)

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects construction work on the A1-M1 link Thrapston bypass to begin.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Subject to the satisfactory completion of the remaining statutory procedures, in the late spring or early summer of next year.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report of the inspector who conducted the public inquiry into the proposed east London river crossing; and when he plans to publish the report.

Mr. Channon: I hope to receive the inspector's report early in 1988. The report will be published at the time Ministers announce the decisions they have taken in the light of the inspector's findings. Given the exceptional length and complexity of this inquiry and the volume of evidence which will need to be considered, this is bound to take some time.

Motorways (Lighting)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Transport when it is planned to install total lighting between junctions 1 to 7 of the M6 motorway; and whether he will estimate the cost of doing so.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no plans to install further lighting on these sections of M6.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Transport by what criteria he decides on the priority for providing additional lighting on motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following a review of policy for the provision of lighting on motorways and all-purpose trunk roads in 1986, I made a statement in the House on 24 July 1986, at column 453, introducing a new procedure for the assessment of lighting proposals on these roads. Details of the assessment technique are given in departmental advice note TA 49/86 "Appraisal of New and Replacement Lighting on Trunk Roads and Trunk Road Motorways". A copy is available in the Library.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Transport when it is planned to install additional lighting between the end of the present lighting near Newport Pagnell and the Buckinghamshire-Northamptonshire boundary of the M1 motorway; and at what estimated cost.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This lighting will be installed in the early stages of a major maintenance contract and should be completed by the end of September. The estimated cost is £260,000.

Northampton (Relief Road)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give consideration to a northern relief road for Northampton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A north-west bypass for Northampton is a local authority road proposal for which Northamptonshire county council is responsible. I understand that planning is at an early stage. Support by transport supplementary grant will be considered at the appropriate time.

M6 (Roadworks)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Transport what roadworks are currently being undertaken on the M6 motorway between its junction with the M1 and junction 7; how long they are scheduled to last; what is the cost of each contract and by whom it is being carried out; and what further roadworks are planned for this section of the M6 and at what estimated cost.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The details of the major contracts are:

Date	Location	Type of work	Contractor	Value £ million	Estimated value £ million	Duration
	Part J4-4A	Resurfacing	Redlands Aggregates	2·9		7 weeks
Planned
1988	Thornbridge viaduct	Resurfacing and joint replacement			1·0
1990	J6-J7 (part including Queslett viaduct)	Resurfacing and joint replacement			1·5
1991	J6-J7 (part)	Resurfacing			1·0

All these contracts will be subject to the lane rental procedure. Additionally the construction of the M1-A1 link will involve lane closures on the M6 near its junction with the M1. These will last a few weeks during 1988 but exact timing is not yet known.

Minor repairs and maintenance activities are also carried out on a regular basis.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the roadworks carried out on the M6 motorway between junctions 5 and 7 since it was opened, giving their duration, cost, purpose and by whom they were completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Details of minor repairs could not be listed except at disproportionate cost. The major roadworks contracts have been as follows:

Year and location	Type of work	Contractor	Contract period weeks	Cost £ million
Witton Viaduct	Resurfacing and new joints	R. M. Douglas	16	0·4
1980
Thornbridge Viaduct	Resurfacing and new joints	R. M. Douglas	12	0·6
Queslett Viaduct

Year and location	Type of work	Contractor	Contract period weeks	Cost £ million
1982
Bromford Viaduct, Stage 1	Resurfacing and new joints	R. M. Douglas	15	1·1
1983
Bromford Viaduct, Stage 2	Resurfacing and new joints	Wrekin Construction	16	1·1
1984
Gravelly Hill Viaduct	Resurfacing and new joints	R. M. Douglas	12	1·0
Witton Viaduct

M6 (Traffic Count)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest count of traffic, by class and weight, using the M6 motorway between junctions 5 and 7; how this compares with estimates and counts since the motorway was opened; and what is the latest forecast of traffic use.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Civil Aviation (Safety)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if his Department monitors the certification standards of foreign authorities granting certificates to civil air transport aircraft which come on to the British register; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he is satisfied that the certification standards of foreign authorities for aircraft coming on to the British register are comparable with those required in Britain to obtain a British civil airworthiness certificate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Safety regulation of civil air transport is a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority. The Department does not monitor either the standard it applies or the standards applied by foreign authorities.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider whether the ditching capability certification requirements should include limitations on sea states in which helicopters can operate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Civil aviation safety regulation is the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. I will ask the chairman of the Authority to write to my hon. Friend.

Air Miss (Cumbria)

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the circumstances surrounding the reported near miss involving British Airways flight 328 and a Royal Air Force Hercules on 15 July and as to what details of the British Airways airplane's flight plans were transmitted to air traffic controllers in Prestwick; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority through the national air traffic services is responsible for all matters concerning air traffic control.

The full circumstances surrounding the incident to which my hon. Friend refers are currently being investigated and will be subject to examination by the joint airmiss working group (JAWG) whose members comprise independent representatives of the aviation community.

Creditor Bypass

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest information which he has as to the date when construction of the Crediton bypass will commence.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand that Devon county council, which is the highway authority for the A377 through Crediton, has programmed the bypass for a start of construction in 1992-93. The priority and timing accorded to this scheme are matters for the county council.

Slow Vehicles (Amber Beacons)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the use of amber beacons on slow vehicles using high speed roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have today made amendments to the Road Vehicles Lighting Regulations 1984 so as to require, from the end of this year, slow-moving vehicles to use amber warning beacons when travelling on unrestricted dual carriageway roads. Experience has shown the value of these beacons in warning other road users of the presence of a slow-moving vehicle. Although the new legal requirement applies only to fast dual carriageway roads, I would recommend owners of farm tractors or similar slow-moving vehicles to fit the beacons for use on any main road, even it it is not a dual carriageway.

Roads Programme

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Transport what actions he proposes to take following the recent review of his Department's road programme procedures.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The review made a number of recommendations and identified a large number of possible areas in which procedures might be further investigated. These have been examined very fully. Changes to procedures and practice are being made and some further investigations will be carried out internally.

The changes in procedures are as follows:

(i.) A new system of monthly slippage reports to headquarters and regional office management is to be set up to provide a basis for more rapid action to reduce delays. It will be based on a new computerised management information system being introduced this summer. Responsibility for progress will remain with the established management line but the new arrangements will provide for earlier recognition of, and attention to, problems.

(ii.) In reviewing the road programme, the Department will consider whether certain schemes merit continued preparation or should be dropped; this change was introduced in the recent review of the road programme.

(iii.) At public consultation stage, regional offices will set out more fully in published documents the basis on which route options are rejected; they will also aim to limit the number of alternative routes to be worked up to detail where such alternatives are clearly unsuitable.

(iv.) Regional offices will aim to allocate a single member of staff to concentrate exclusively on drafting each decision letter; in exceptional cases, the Department will consider bringing in staff from outside the regional office to assist. The Department will also review the scope for keeping the length of decision letters to a minimum.

(v.) The Department will aim to maintain a flexible approach to staff postings in relation to peaks and troughs of work in regional offices.

Items to be the subject of further review are:

(i.) Ways of accelerating preparation of submissions to the Treasury on schemes outside its delegation;

(ii.) The scope for further use of whole-route assessments where a scheme or schemes within a route are likely to prove negative or marginal in economic terms;

(iii.) Means by which the Highways Manual, the Department's comprehensive internal manual of procedure and practice, might be most effectively revised in preparation for a full revision.

The changes are expected to reduce delay. We shall continue to keep all aspects of our procedures under review.

Light Rapid Transit System (Manchester)

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has considered the applications from the Greater Manchester passenger transport executive for a grant towards the cost of the proposed light rapid transit system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I have considered these proposals very carefully and sympathetically. The passenger transport executive has undertaken a substantial amount of work in preparing economic and financial appraisals and the results appear very promising. The forecast effects on public expenditure are nevertheless significant and I need to consider these further before taking a decision. In particular, I have asked my Department to explore with the PTA and PTE the scope for reducing the projected burden on the public purse through the involvement of private finance. I have asked for the necessary work to take place quickly and will make a further announcement as soon as possible.

Level Crossings (Report)

Mr. Moss asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive Professor Stott's report on the safety of open level crossings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Professor Stott submitted his report on 17 July. I am very grateful to him for his careful and detailed work following his appointment, announced by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Transport, on 16 October 1986, to conduct a review of the safety record of automatic open level crossings. I am arranging for the report to be published as soon as possible.

Professor Stott has found that there are few accidents at open level crossings (on average eight a year) and that collisions are almost always due to failure of vehicle drivers to observe the signals. There is no evidence that accidents have been caused by the failure of the equipment. Although the number of road vehicles and trains using automatic open crossings is lower than at other crossings, Professor Stott finds that collisions are 20 times more frequent in relation to traffic density than at the more heavily used automatic half-barrier crossings. Nevertheless, the report concludes that 70 per cent. of the existing open crossings constitute an appropriate modern replacement of manned crossings. At the remainder, traffic loading combined with train speed makes open crossings inappropriate. For the latter, the report recommends that there should be a five-year programme of alterations to open crossings, either by conversion to automatic half barriers or by reducing train speeds.

I accept in principle the central recommendation of Professor Stott's report and am consulting British Rail urgently on its implementation. I shall consult more widely with local highway authorities and others when the full report is published.

Passenger Transport Authorities

Mr. Kirkhope asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has determined expenditure levels for the passenger transport authorities for 1988-89.

Mr. Channon: I have today notified the authorities of my determinations as follows:

	£ million
Greater Manchester	80·0
Merseyside	58·5
South Yorkshire	41·5
Tyne and Wear	53·5
West Midlands	59·5
West Yorkshire	57·0

Under section 3(4) of the Rates Act 1984 any authority may apply for a redetermination of its expenditure level at a greater amount. I have invited such applications to be submitted by 16 October, and before reaching decisions on them will carefully consider any representations made or information provided.

Highways Work Contracts (Consulting Engineer)

Mr. Jack asked the Secretary of State for Transport if any decision has been reached concerning proposals to remove the independent authority of the consulting engineer in his Department's highways work contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Having carefully considered the comments and views of all concerned I have decided to introduce on a trial basis new arrangements which modify the position of the consultant engineer in any motorway and trunk road contracts. The aim of these changes is to strengthen the Department's control over the projects within its responsibility and the large public expenditure involved.

Under the new arrangements consulting engineers will continue to be retained to design and supervise construction; but the position of the consultant engineer will be modified so that in the contracts to which the new arrangements will apply he loses the independent role of the engineer as defined in the Institution of Civil Engineers' conditions of contract. Instead, he will act in the role of adviser and agent of the Department. The changes will be effected by appropriate amendments to the institution's conditions of contract when used by the Department, and all matters which currently fall to the engineer to decide will in future fall to the Department.

These changes will be introduced gradually so as to avoid disruption of projects, and give opportunity for monitoring the effects. I intend to start with three or four schemes in the next 12 months and then, in the light of experience to extend the changes more widely.

These changes should be seen as one of a variety of measures being taken to strengthen control over highway projects and ensure value for money. They should not in any way be seen as a reflection on the capability of the civil engineering profession which has made a major contribution to British exports and enjoys a justifiably high reputation both at home and overseas for the quality of its work. I look forward to the continuing co-operation of the profession in carrying forward the road programme in the years ahead.

British Transport Advertising

Mr. Curry asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the future of British Transport Advertising.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am pleased to announce that, following a recommendation from the British Railways Board, the Secretary of State has given his consent under section 1(2) of the Transport Act 1981 to the board's sale of British Transport Advertising Limited to a new company formed by the BTA management group.

The board's choice of the BTA management group follows an extensive competitive tender exercise. The management group will be making a payment for the net assets of the BTA business. In addition, it will make guaranteed revenue payments to the board throughout the five-year concession for the commercial advertising rights on the board's stations and properties. The new owners will take over the business towards the end of August, subject to the completion of legal arrangements.

This is another welcome step towards increasing the role of the private sector in supplying services to the railway, in line with the objectives which we have asked the board to pursue. I wish the management and staff of British Transport Advertising every success as they enter the private sector.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Authorised Access

Mr. Dykes asked the Lord Privy Seal (1) if he will list those persons officially authorised and entitled to use the Ways and Means Corridor between the Library and the Members' Lobby;

(2) if he will list those persons officially authorised and entitled to use the corridor leading from the Members' Lobby to the stairway leading down to the Members' Cloakroom.

Mr. Wakeham: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Annunciators

Mr. Corbett asked the Lord Privy Seal whether he will institute a review of the use of the 12-hour and 24-hour clocks on television monitors in the House.

Mr. Wakeham: I will refer the hon. Gentleman's point to the Services Committee, once the members of that Committee have been nominated by the House.

Mr. Corbett asked the Lord Privy Seal whether he will bring forward proposals for the use of television monitors in the House to show messages for hon. Members at suitable intervals.

Mr. Wakeham: This would not be practicable with the existing annunciator system, and I do not consider that a separate network for this purpose would be justifiable. I understand that the Parliamentary Works Office of PSA, in conjunction with the relevant Sub-Committee of the Services Committee, will be reviewing the future of the annunciator system during the coming months, and I will draw the hon. Gentleman's suggestion to its attention.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecutors

Mr. Amess asked the Attorney-General how many Crown prosecutors are employed at present; and how many were employed before the formation of the Crown Prosecution Service in England and Wales.

The Attorney-General: On 1 June 1987 there were 1,263 lawyers employed within the Crown Prosecution Service. Of these, 626 were in the Crown prosecutor grade. Prior to the establishment of the Crown Prosecution Service in 1986, the majority of prosecuting lawyers were employed by local rather than central Government. Accurate information as to their numbers is not available.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Attorney-General what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Law Officers Department in each year since 1979.

The Attorney-General: The relevant information in relation to the Lord Chancellor's Department is given in the tables. The Law Officers' Department keeps no separate record of this information as its staff are all seconded from other Government Departments.

Retired Judges

Mr. Parry asked the Attorney-General how many judges now on the Bench have previously retired.

The Attorney-General: Forty-eight judges who have previously retired as full-time members of the judiciary are authorised by the Lord Chancellor to sit part-time in the Supreme Court and county court as deputies, as required.

Mr. Parry asked the Attorney-General if he will list the number of judges over the age of 70 years; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: By virtue of section 11 of the Supreme Court Act 1981 a judge of the Supreme Court is obliged to vacate his office at the age of 75. Fourteen judges of the Supreme Court are over the age of 70 out of a total complement of 102. By virtue of section 17 of the Courts Act 1971 a circuit judge is obliged to vacate his office at the end of the completed year of service in which he attains the age of 72 unless authorised by the Lord Chancellor in the public interest to continue in office until he attains the age of 75. Twenty-six circuit judges are over the age of 70 out of a total current complement of 389.

Social Security Commissioner for Wales

Mr. Thomas asked the Attorney-General whether he has yet come to a decision on the future of the post of social security commissioner for Wales; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Gentleman, the Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 16 July at column 567.

Family Low Reform Act 1987

Mr. Corbett asked the Attorney-General what his latest estimate is of the full cost of bringing the Family Law Reform Act 1987 into force.

The Attorney-General: The latest estimate of the annual cost in current prices of implementing part II of this Act is about £3·5 million. The rest of the Act does not require significant resources.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Attorney-General if he has received the Director of Public Prosecution's report on the Crown Prosecution Service for the year 1986-87; and when this report will be laid before Parliament.

The Attorney-General: I have received the proof of this report and a copy of the proof has been placed in the Journal Office today. The report will be published later this summer and copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Devon County Council (Official Appointment)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Attorney-General whether he will apply ex officio to the High Court for a judicial review into the circumstances in which Mrs. Baron was appointed by Devon county council to a post at Burlescombe primary school without the vacancy having been advertised and in a manner allegedly incompatible with the officially stated procedures for making such appointments.

The Attorney-General: The matter is under consideration.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Council of Europe and Western European Union

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out in the Official Report the tasks he envisages for the British delegation to the Council of Europe and the Western European Union countries in the next five years.

Mrs. Chalker: We expect the British parliamentary delegation to continue to play a full and active role in the assemblies and committees of the Council of Europe and WEU in furtherance of the aims of these organisations.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not held centrally for all grades employed in the diplomatic wing and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information readily available for Diplomatic Service grades only (excluding Home Civil Service grades in the diplomatic wing) since 1984 is set out in the tables.

The information for the aid wing is not readily available and will be provided in due course.

BMEWS, Fylingdales

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest advice concerning the implications for the compliance with the anti-ballistic missile treaty of the conversion work at BMEWS, Fylingdales.

Mr. Mellor: We are satisfied that the modernisation of RAF Fylingdales will be in full conformity with United States obligations under the ABM treaty. There was a ballistic missile early warning system installation at Fylingdales before the treaty was signed in 1972. The treaty does not prohibit modernisation of BMEWS radars already in existence when the treaty provisions came into force.

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the large phased array radar under construction at the BMEWS, Fylingdales, will be (a) within the agreed anti-ballistic missile deployment area, (b) at an agreed anti-ballistic missile test range, (c) used for the sole purpose of arms control verification, (d) used for the sole purpose of tracking space objects or (e) for early warning of attack.

Mr. Mellor: RAF Fylingdales is, and after modernisation is still planned to be, an early warning radar not an anti-ballistic missile control facility. Its primary role is to give early warning of ballistic missiles and it has a secondary role as a space tracking facility. RAF Fylingdales currently has no arms control verification role.

Pershing Missiles (Conversions)

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has made any representations to the United States concerning the planned conversion of Pershing II missiles into Pershing 1B.

Mr. Mellor: The details of the United States/Soviet intermediate nuclear force negotiations are confidential and, as the right hon. Member knows, a matter of close consultation between the United States and her NATO allies.

Zero-zero Agreement

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which North Atlantic Treaty Organisation short range intermediate nuclear force missiles will be eliminated following a zero-zero agreement.

Mr. Mellor: The United States/Soviet intermediate nuclear force negotiations in Geneva cover United States and Soviet longer and shorter range intermediate missiles. The United States does not have any shorter range intermediate missiles in Europe.

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment his Department has made as to the Soviet response in the event of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation deciding to deploy more nuclear capable bombers and SLCM equipped submarines following a zero-zero agreement;

(2) whether he has had any discussions with European North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies concerning the possible basing of United States SLCM equipped submarines and more nuclear capable bombers following in intermediate nuclear force agreement.

Mr. Mellor: There are continuing discussions within the North Atlantic Alliance on all relevant factors concerning the maintenance of deterrence with a minimum number of weapons. These discussions are confidential.

Outer Space Treaty

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has had any recent discussions with his United States counterpart concerning the outer space treaty.

Mr. Mellor: We are in close and regular contact with the United States Administration on the full range of arms control issues including those concerning space.

INF Agreement

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will outline his proposals for the verification of an intermediate nuclear force agreement;

(2) what is his policy towards the United States proposal for on-site inspection of the dismantling of Soviet intermediate range missiles;

(3) what is his policy towards the United States proposal that the Soviets should grant United States inspectors 24 hour access to Soviet plants and facilities concerned with intermediate nuclear force in the wake of an agreement.

Mr. Mellor: The details of the verification regime to be applied in an intermediate nuclear force agreement are still being negotiated between the United States and the Soviet Union. The details of the negotiations are confidential. The United States is consulting the United Kingdom and other basing countries closely.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline his proposals for the verification of a chemical weapons agreement.

Mr. Mellor: We believe there must be an agreed and reliable system of information exchange and on-site inspections on a routine basis at, for example, facilities where chemical weapons are to be destroyed; and civil chemical plants where industrial chemicals posing a risk to the convention are manufactured or used. In addition, there will need to be a stringent challenge inspection regime intended to deter any state from breaching the convention.

A new international organisation would be created to conduct verification activities. I tabled a new paper setting out the arrangements needed to bring this body into operation when I visited the conference on disarmament on 14 July. Copies of the paper and of my speech to the conference will be deposited in the Libraries of the House.

Radar Installations

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has discussed or intends to discuss with his Soviet counterpart the possibility of their dismantling the large phased array radar at Krasnoyarsk in return for the cancellation of the United States air force large phased array radar as Fylingdales.

Mr. Mellor: No. The facilities at Krasnoyarsk and Fylingdales are not comparable. A trade-off would not be acceptable and therefore I see no purpose to be served by the kind of discussions the right hon. Member suggests.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future administration of the island of Diego Garcia.

Mrs. Chalker: The island of Diego Garcia is the largest island in the British Indian Ocean Territory, which will continue to be administered by a commissioner, who is assisted by the officer in charge of the Royal Navy complement on Diego Garcia.

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions Her Majesty's Government have conducted with the United States of America's Government concerning the deployment of nuclear weapons on the island of Diego Garcia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: None. The 1976 exchange of notes between the United States of America and the United Kingdom requires both Governments to consult periodically on joint objectives, policies and activities in the British Indian Ocean Territory. As is well known, it is not the policy of the United States or the United Kingdom to confirm or deny the deployment of nuclear weapons in any place at any time.

Defence Exports (Iran-Iraq)

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will further define those categories of non-lethal defence equipment which may be exported from the United Kingdom to Iran and Iraq.

Mr. Mellor: Such exports are not categorised. I refer the hon. Member to the guidelines on defence sales to Iran and Iraq that my right hon. and learned Friend announced to the House on 29 October 1985, at column 454, in his answer to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel). We prohibit the sale of any defence-related equipment that could significantly enhance the capability of either side to prolong or exacerbate the conflict.

Persian Gulf

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received requests from the United States Government on making available docking and logistical support for the United States navy in the Gulf under the United Kingdom security agreement with the Sultanate of Oman.

Mr. Mellor: No.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom embassy in Washington has bought any copies of Spycatcher.

Mr. Mellor: Yes.

Disarmament Resolutions

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the United Kingdom voted on the following disarmament resolutions: (a) 41/46 cessation all nuclear tests A and B, (b) 41/47 urgent need for a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty and (c) 41/54 implementation of General Assembly resolution 40/88 on the immediate cessation and prohibition of nuclear weapon tests and (d) 4/59 (N) notification of nuclear tests, in the 41st United Nations General Assembly; and how many other nations voted with the United Kingdom in each case.

Mr. Mellor: The United Kingdom voted against resolutions 41/46A, 41/46B and 41/54, and abstained on resolutions 41/47 and 41/59N. Fourteen other countries abstained on resolution 41/47 and 21 on 41/59N. In the case of resolutions 41/46A, 41/46B and 41/54, the United Kingdom voted in the company of two other Western nuclear weapons states.

Warhead Testing Moratorium

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate his Department has made of the implications the Congressional House resolution 12, on mutual warhead testing moratorium, of 6 January, will have on the continued United Kingdom nuclear warhead testing programme in Nevada.

Mr. Mellor: House resolution 12 does not reflect the policy of the United States Administration, which conducts nuclear tests in accordance with the 150 Kt limit of the unratified threshold test ban treaty. Although not a signatory to the treaty, the United Kingdom conducts its nuclear tests in accordance with this limit.

We note that House resolution 12 makes "in-country reciprocal monitoring arrangements" a condition for prohibiting tests above 1 Kt. We also note that the Russians have not yet accepted United States proposals for measures of this type with respect to the 150 Kt threshold treaty.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what procedures Her Majesty's Government have established to monitor the measures which have been imposed against South Africa; and what have been the conclusions of such monitoring.

Mrs. Chalker: We are satisfied that we have fully implemented our international obligations on restrictive measures against South Africa.

Namibia

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the statement made by Her Majesty's ambassador to South Africa on a visit to Windhoek, Namibia, on 2 June, that the South African administration in Namibia is a meaningful development on the road to independence provided that it becomes a means of obtaining internationally recognised independence for the region, represents Government policy.

Mrs. Chalker: Her Majesty's ambassador to South Africa was misquoted. There has been no change in our policy on Namibia or towards the so-called "transitional Government of national unity".

British Council

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what importance his Department places on the role of the British Council in promoting British interests abroad; how his Department sees this role developing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: This Department attaches great importance to the continuing role of the British council as one of the main agencies for executing Britain's cultural activities overseas.

Consular Services (Fees)

Mr. Kirkhope asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to increase fees for consular services.

Mr. Eggar: Yes. An Order in Council (the Consular Fees Order 1987) was made on 21 July 1987, the first opportunity following the new Session of Parliament. It provides for increases in certain consular fees with effect from Tuesday, 1 September 1987. Passport and visa fees are not included in the increases. Subject to the effects of exchange rate movements and overseas inflation, the new fee levels should reduce the deficit on consular fee-bearing services to about £500,000 in 1988-89.

The increases will be the first since November 1983. Since then costs, particularly overseas, have increased substantially. It has been the policy of this and previous Governments that the cost of consular services should as far as possible be borne by the users.

Falkland Islands (Fishing Licences)

Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest estimate of revenue from fishing licences in the Falklands.

Mr. Eggar: By 1 July the Falkland Islands Government had received approximately £12·5 million from fishing licences. The Falkland Islands Government estimate that licence revenue for 1987 will be £13·5 million and receipts from trans-shipment fees £800,000. The costs of implementation of the Falkland Islands interim conservation and management zone (FICZ) are estimated at approximately £4 million for a full 12 months.

Territorial Sea Act 1987

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Territorial Sea Act 1987 will come into force.

Mr. Eggar: The Territorial Sea Act 1987 will come into force in respect of the United Kingdom on 1 October 1987.

BBC (World Television News)

Mr. Lester asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his statement on 13 July, Official Report, column 774, when he expects to receive the British Broadcasting Corporation's revised proposal for a world television news service.

Mr. Eggar: We now understand that we can expect to receive the proposal during the latter half of August.

Overseas Students

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what moves are being taken by his Department or under the auspices of his Department to encourage overseas students to study in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We attach great importance to encouraging overseas students to come to Britain, and the numbers doing so are increasing year by year. In 1986-87 we provided over £87 million to bring 17,500 students to the United Kingdom. A quarter of all overseas students here receive some help from us.

In addition to our regular scholarship schemes, we are developing shared funding scholarships in co-operation with the universities, industry and bodies such as the British Council of Churches and the Royal Society.

We have also recently established with the Victoria League "Hosting for Overseas Students" (HOST) which will co-ordinate hospitality for foreign students and help to make them feel welcome in this country, and to enjoy their stay here.

North Atlantic Assembly

Mr. Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report the United Kingdom parliamentary delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Grange Precinct, Birkenhead

Mr. Frank Field asked the hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, when he expects the Church Commissioners to enter into the partnership agreement between themselves, the Wirral council and the Shell pension fund in respect to phase 2 of the Grange precinct, Birkenhead.

Mr. Alison: The variation of the existing development agreement between themselves, the Wirral borough council and the Shell pension fund, for which terms have been agreed and which will enable this imaginative further investment in this inner city area to proceed, will be entered into as soon as the legal formalities have been completed. The Commissioners know of no reason why this should not be in the near future.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in the Department of Trade and Industry in each year since 1979.

Credit Card Franchise Services

Sir William Clark asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what account was taken, in deciding to refer credit card franchise services to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, of the time taken by, and the results of, the earlier and similar reference.

Mr. Maude: The Director General of Fair Trading made the monopoly reference, which covers services to cardholders as well as franchise services to traders, as a direct result of his monitoring of the market following the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's 1980 report. In that report the Commission recommended that the Director General should keep the market under review, and should consider whether to make a further reference. The Director General took fully into account all the considerations set out by the Commission in its report.

Sir William Clark asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will include within the terms of reference of the recent reference of credit card franchise services to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission consideration of all credit card and storecard services.

Mr. Maude: The terms of a monopoly reference made by the Director General of Fair Trading under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973 can only be varied by the Director General. The Director General has made it clear that he gave careful consideration to the question of whether to include storecard services in the reference. I understand that the Director General concluded that the Commission should focus on credit cards, which may be used in a wide variety of outlets.

Sir William Clark asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the considerations which led to the reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission by the Director General of Fair Trading on 27 May of credit card franchise services.

Mr. Maude: I understand that the Director General of Fair Trading considered that in the context of the substantial growth of widely issued cards such as Barclaycard and Access the following factors, among others, were important:

(i) the profitability of banks issuing credit cards appears to be high;

(ii) the monopoly position of the established banks found by the Commission does not appear to have been seriously challenged;

(iii) the rates charged to cardholders by Barclaycard and by the Access banks appear to have remained high in relation to the level of and movements in bank base rates.

Bankruptcies

Mr. Battle asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the number of bankruptcies in businesses employing fewer than 50 people in Leeds, West constituency for each of the past five years; and in each case how many redundancies occured.

Mr. Butcher: The information that is available is given in the table. Bankruptcies cover individuals and partnerships: in England and Wales as a whole between 70 and 75 per cent. of bankruptcies are unincorporated businesses. No records are kept of the numbers of employees of unincorporated businesses declared bankrupt and no regional analysis is made of company liquidations.

Numbers of Bankruptcies in the Leeds county court 1982-86:

1984	72
1985	83

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Corbett asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to the average number of hours devoted by each member of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to its business in each of the past four years.

Mr. Maude: The precise information requested is not available. The chairmanship of the Commission is a full time appointment and those of the three deputy chairmen are half time. The regular members of the commission are expected to devote an average of 1½ days per week to the Commission's work.

Research (Costs)

Mr. Corbett asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the cost of funding, through the British National Space Centre, of research in the field of high technology thermoplastics polymers for space structures; and over what period funding has been provided.

Mr. Butcher: Funding of £79,222 (excluding VAT) has so far been provided through the British National Space Centre, and its predecessors, for research in the field of high technology thermoplastics polymers for space structures. This work commenced on 1 November 1984.

Cash Cards

Mr. McCrindle asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received calling for a statutory code covering the use of cash cards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have received no such representations, although I understand that the idea of a statutory code for card issuers has been put forward in recent evidence to the review committee on banking services law.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to seek to ban card issuers mailing unsolicited cash cards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have no plans to introduce legislation to control the way in which cash cards are issued. Unsolicited mailing of credit cards is already prohibited under section 51 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974.

Birds (Imports)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of the Lancaster if he will specify by type, country of origin and quantity the birds imported into the United Kingdom in each of the past five years; and how many birds were dead on arrival in the United Kingom.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information on species imported into the United Kingdom for each of the past five years, as identified within the Overseas Trades Statistics, is in the following tables. For information on imports of controlled species imported into the United Kingdom, I refer the hon. Member to the annual reports for the years 1982 to 1984, published by the Department of the Environment, on the "Implementation in the United Kingdom of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Flora and Fauna", copies of which are in the Library. Information on the number of birds dead on arrival in the United Kingdom is not available.

South Africa

Mr. Cohen asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will outline the actions taken by Her Majesty's Government to implement the voluntary ban on new investment in South Africa, as agreed by the Prime Minister at the Commonwealth review meeting in August 1986; and whether any mechanisms have been established to monitor this voluntary ban.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry wrote to the Chairman of the CBI, the British Industry Committee on South Africa and the United Kingdom South Africa Trade Association asking them to urge their members to comply with the voluntary ban on new investment in South Africa, the implementation of which was announced on 30 October 1986. In addition, officials of this Department wrote to companies identified as having interests in South Africa to draw their attention to this measure. The ban was also widely reported in the press.

No mechanism has been established to monitor this voluntary ban.

Mr. Cabom asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to extend the voluntary ban on new investment in South Africa to include new investment in Namibia.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Development Area Status (Reviews)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all occasions on which there have been general reviews of development area status and any changes to the status of particular areas between the reviews in each case.

Mr. Atkins: Development areas were designated under the Distribution of Industry Act 1945. Since then, several general reviews have taken place, the two most recent being in 1979 and 1984. Details of changes in the status of particular areas between these most recent reviews are set out in the following statutory instruments which can be found in the House of Commons Library:

1. 1979 No. 1642 Industrial Development: The Assisted Areas (Amendment) Order 1979.
2. 1980 No. 1110 Industrial Development: The Assisted Areas (Amendment) Order 1980.
3. 1982 No. 934 Industrial Development: The Assisted Areas (Amendment) Order 1982.

"Today" (Takeover)

Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will deposit in the Library a memorandum of the financial and other material upon which he formed his judgment not to refer the takeover of the Today newspaper to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 9 July 1987, c 272]: The material in question has now been deposited in the Library.

General Certificate of Secondary Education Examination

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied that the city of Birmingham local education authority has complete guidance from general certificate of secondary education examining boards about introducing the new system of examinations from September.

Mrs. Rumbold: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) in which subjects textbooks have (a) been issued and (b) not been issued in support of the new general certificate of secondary education system of national examinations;

(2) whether he will list those general certificate of secondary education examining boards which have completed work and issued the results on the mode of attendance and assessment, syllabuses, textbooks and staff training ready for the start of the new scheme in September;

(3) whether he will list those general certificate of secondary education examining boards which have yet to agree and issue examination syllabuses; and when he expects textbooks in support of them to be available.

Mrs. Rumbold: A wide choice of GCSE syllabuses in the 20 main subjects have been available in schools for over a year. The GCSE examining groups have continued to produce further syllabuses, including additional choices for mature students who will begin their first GCSE courses this September.

The GCSE does not call for the wholesale replacement of textbooks; the need is rather for these to be supplemented and updated over time. The GCSE groups have given the Educational Publishers Council every assistance to enable a full range of GCSE textbooks to be produced, and many have already been published. The Government are continuing to provide substantial resources to enable the purchase of additional books for the GCSE.

Introductory in-service training for GCSE was completed in 1986. This year and next, further training continues for teachers in schools and further education, supported by Government as a national priority.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied that regulations drawn up by general certificate of secondary education examining boards are compatible where schools enter students for two or more board examinations.

Mrs. Rumbold: The GCSE examining groups have themselves established a joint council to consider such matters of common concern. I look to the joint council to ensure compatability in arrangements so that schools may exercise freedom of choice of syllabus.

School Meals and Transport

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the cost of extending free school meals to all pupils in primary schools, to all pupils in secondary schools and to all pupils in special schools.

Mr. Dunn: The additional cost of providing free school meals for all pupils in maintained schools is estimated to be about £600 million. It is not possible to give separate figures for each sector.

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent by local authorities on (a) school transport and (b) school meals in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the comparable figures for each year since 1978-79 in cash terms and real terms using 1986-87 prices and using an index of 100 for 1978-79.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is as follows:

	School transport			School meals
	Cash terms £ million	Real terms £ million	Index £ million	Cash terms £ million	Real terms £ million	Index

School Books and Equipment

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest figure for expenditure per pupil on books and on equipment in (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) special schools; and what are the comparable figures for each of the years since 1978-79, in cash terms and real terms using 1986-87 prices and using an index of 100 for 1978-79.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is as follows:

Mrs. Suzana Caine

Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to validate the teaching application of Mrs. Suzana Caine.

Mrs. Rumbold: Mrs. Caine has been notified today that she is a qualified teacher.

National Curriculum

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the problems for special education caused by proposals for a national curriculum framework; and what methods are to be used to monitor individual progress at the ages of seven, 11 and 14 years of age for children with special educational needs.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is shortly to issue a consultation document on his proposal for the national curriculum. Copies of that document will be placed in the Library. My right hon. Friend is aware of the need to pay close attention to the implications of those proposals for children with special educational needs, and he will be giving careful consideration to the comments he receives on his proposals from organisations with particular concerns for such pupils.

Special Education

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he plans to undertake a study of the Education Act 1981 procedures in the pre-school period in consultation with local education authorities;

(2) what is his policy towards the allocation of teaching time in primary and secondary school staffing ratios to meet the wider range of special educational needs;

(3) if he intends to create a national advisory committee for special educational needs;

(4) if he intends to issue national guidance on the statutory provision of special education in general terms under the Education Act 1981.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 10 July 1987, at column 283.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table in the Official Report of information available to him showing expenditure on special educational provision, the number of children with special educational needs and the percentage of children with special educational needs in ordinary schools for each country in the Council of Europe for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: The limited information available to the Department on this subject is not fully comparable between countries. It would therefore be misleading to show such a table in the Official Report. I shall write to the hon. Member with details.

Initial Teacher Training

Mr. Morgan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the criteria on which the University Grants Committee bases its closure proposals for initial teacher training at university education faculties; whether the criteria differ as between England and Wales; and what account they take of faculties of education which have received high commendations from Her Majesty's inspectors in the relevant specialism.

Mr. Jackson: The recommendations adopted by the University Grants Committee for initial teacher training in Wales are based on a detailed study undertaken by a joint working group of the UGC and the Wales Advisory Body for Local Authority Higher Education. The proposals are intended to produce strong and well-resourced centres of teaching and research; detailed plans will now be developed in collaboration with the WAB and in consultation with the institutions concerned. The criteria employed draw not only on reports of Her Majesty's inspectors, but also on the research and recruitment record of institutions, and on the working group's own visits to all the centres of initial teacher training in Wales. No comparable exercise has been conducted in England.

11-plus Selection

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those local education authorities which still retain selection at the age of 11 years.

Mr. Dunn: The following are those LEAs which at June 1987 maintained one or more grammar schools with selection at age 11 or 12.

Core Curriculum

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science by what date a core curriculum in secondary education will begin to be introduced; by what date it is expected to be fully implemented; and which subjects will be included.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend intends to issue a consultation document shortly containing his proposals on all these matters. I shall arrange for a copy to be sent to the hon. Member.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he had to introduce a core curriculum in CTCs; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: City technology colleges will be required as a condition of grant to implement the substance of the national curriculum. This will give CTCs, like maintained schools, enough flexibility to put a special emphasis on science and technology and to develop or experiment with new approaches.

Class Sizes

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the average sizes in each of the local education authorities for primary and secondary classes for each of the past three years.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested for maintained primary and secondary schools for each local education authority in England for each of the past three years is given in the following table. The average class sizes relate to classes taught by one teacher on a selected period on the day of the census count in January of each year and may not, therefore, be representative of the pattern of classes over the academic year as a whole.

Tertiary Education

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those local education authorities where tertiary education has been approved by his Department under sections 12 to 15 of the Education Act 1980; and what is the number of students involved.

Mr. Dunn: The table shows the local education authorities whose proposals under sections 12 to 15 of the Education Act 1980 involving the establishment of tertiary colleges for all or part of the authority's area have been approved by my right hon. Friend or his predecessors, the colleges involved, and the number of FTE students on roll at November 1986.

Educational Achievements

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the percentage of pupils obtaining in 1985-86 five or more O-level passes by local education authority, and the number obtaining two or more A-level passes, by local education authority.

Mr. Dunn: The proportions of English maintained school leavers achieving the requested CSE/GCE qualification are as follows:

Leavers from Maintained Schools
Numbers and percentage achieving 5 or more Higher grade (1) passes at GCE O level or CSE and 2 or more A level passes.

16 and 17-year-olds

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total number of pupils remaining in education after (a) 16 years and (b) 17 years but under the age of 19 years, in each local education authority in England, for the latest date available; and what was the amount granted in discretionary awards by each local education authority.

Mr. Dunn: The available information is given in the following table. Expenditure is not collected by students' age, but practically all lesser-value awards are for students aged under 19. Student numbers have been given for 16 and 17-year-olds in full time education at school and in non-advanced further education. Figures for 18-year-olds are not readily available.

Foreign Nationals

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (a) the number of foreign nationals who have studied in Britain from 1979 to 1987 inclusive and (b) the cost per annum in real terms to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jackson: Information is available only for students whose normal domicile is outside the United Kingdom and who were attending full-time and sandwich courses at further and higher education establishments in Great Britain. This information is as follows for the years asked for (statistics for 1986 are provisional, and data for 1987 are not yet available):

Apart from students from European Community countries and students supported under one of the Government awards schemes, all have been expected since 1980 to pay fees at a level which reflects the full cost of tuition and avoids subsidy by the British taxpayer.

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what expenditure level he proposes to determine for the Inner London education authority in respect of 1988-89.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Under the provisions of the Local Government Act 1985 the Inner London education authorirty is automatically subject to designation under part I of the Rates Act 1984 for three years from 1 April 1986. For the year beginning 1 April 1988 have decided to determine an expenditure levell of £955 million; this represents a cash standstill on the implied expenditure level for 1987-88, plus allowance for the cost in a full year of the 1987 school teachers' pay settlement. The ILEA has today been notified of this determination.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Tredinnick asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how his proposals for a national foundation curriculum will affect the operation of the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mrs. Rumbold: TVEI will continue to be available to fund programmes of curriculum development and enrichment in schools and colleges in all LEAs along the lines set out in the White Paper "Working Together—Education and Training" (Cmnd. 9823). In considering proposals for extension of TVEI, the Department will ensure that those accepted are consistent with the published TVEI curricular criteria and with the proposed requirements of the national curriculum.

Education Bill

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the forthcoming Education Bill will contain any provisions on local authority maintained further education.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Yes, the Government intend that the forthcoming Bill should contain provisions on maintained further education in England and Wales. We propose that, as with schools, local education authorities should be placed under a duty to delegate financial powers to colleges. We also propose to reform the composition and role of college governing boldies. And in order to provide a secure foundation for these changes, we propose to reform the legal basis of further education, in particular by restating the duty to provide further education and by repealing the provisions in the Education Act 1944 on FE schemes.

The Government will be issuing shortly a consultation paper setting out our proposals in more detail.

Science Budget

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received advice from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on science budget expenditures.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The ABRC submitted advice last month in connection with this year's public expenditure survey. I have arranged for it to be published today. The board's advice will be considered carefully by the Government in the context of the survey and I shall inform the board and the House of our conclusions in the autumn.

Academic Tenure

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to introduce legislation to restrict academic tenure.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Yes. The Government's intention to legislate in this area at a suitable opportunity has been known for some time and our Bill will contain relevant provisions. My Department will be consulting representatives of those most closely concerned and I have today placed in the Library a document which forms the basis of those consultations.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Technical Training Programme

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of foreign nationals who have come to Britain under the Overseas Development Administration technical co-operation training programme in each year of its operation and the cost per annum in real terms to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is given in the following table. Figures on a consistent basis are available from 1976 to 1986. Expenditure in each year covers new arrivals and those still on course from previous year(s).

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programme

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his plans for the community programme.

Mr. Fowler: We plan to improve the community programme by making it full time and paying a premium over and above social security entitlements. This will make the programme much more attractive to long-term unemployed people with families. We also propose to enhance significantly the training content of the programme.

Job Training Scheme

Ms. Armstrong asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline his plans for the job training scheme.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Hicks) on Thursday 16 July 1987, at column 592.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are on the job training scheme.

Mr. Cope: At 10 July 1987 14,371 people were receiving training on the new job training scheme.

Mr. Rees asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have taken up places on the job training scheme since it began; how many are currently in training; and how many have left the scheme.

Mr. Cope: By 10 July 1987, 22,979 people had joined the new job training scheme; 14,371 are currently in training and 8,608 have left the scheme.

Mr. Rees asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the breakdown of people in training on the job training scheme by geographical location and the occupation for which they are being trained.

Mr. Cope: The table gives a breakdown of the number in training on the new job training scheme, by Manpower Services Commission vocational education and training group area as at 3 July, the latest date for which the area information is available.

Details of the occupational areas in which training is taking place are not yet available. This information will be collected by means of a sample survey to be conducted late in the autumn.

Training Schemes

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he takes to ensure that training schemes for which his Department is responsible ensure that the United Kingdom has sufficient skills available to it to meet industry's needs for the foreseeable future.

Mr. Cope: Employers are primarily responsible for meeting the skill needs of industry. Nevertheless, the Government make a significant contribution. The main emphasis is on helping young people and the unemployed through YTS and the new job training scheme. These programmes are designed to provide people with the opportunity to acquire qualifications and job-related skills to standards set by industry.

The mix of training provision in any particular area is dictated by the needs of the local labour market. The Manpower Services Commission is working with others to provide this information. It has recently introduced a computerised system to collect local labour market information and has set up a skills unit which monitors trends in the supply of and demand for skills.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people there are on youth training schemes in the constituencies of (a) Burnley, (b) Pendle, (c) Hyndburn and (d) Rossendale and Darwen.

Mr. Lee: The information is shown in the table.

Number of young people on youth training scheme at 30 June 1987[2]

Local authority district[1]	Number
Burnley	389
Pendle	688
Hyndburn	834
Rossendale and Darwen[3]	1,264

[1] As the Manpower Services Commission's computerised management information system does not collect information by constituency, figures have been given for local authority districts.

[2] This is the latest date for which figures are available.

[3] Statistics for Darwen are not readily available. The figure given represents Rossendale local authority district and Blackburn local authority district, which includes Darwen.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of those without work who have never had a paid job.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 11 June 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom who had not entered employment since leaving full-time education was 243,782.

YTS

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the availability of YTS schemes in rural areas.

Mr. Cope: The number of YTS places available is generally ahead of demand in all parts of the country, including rural areas. For trainees in particularly remote areas assistance is available with travel and lodging costs.

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS places have been lost due to bankruptcies in businesses employing fewer than 50 people in Leeds, West constituency in each of the past five years; and how many of these YTS places have been replaced.

Mr. Cope: I regret that the information requested is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sheltered Placements Scheme

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider increasing the resources available to the sheltered placements scheme; and if he will indicate how many additional places will be made available before 31 March 1988.

Mr. Lee: The sheltered placement scheme is set to increase by around 1,200 places in 1987-88 — an expansion of over 40 per cent. in a single year. I have no plans to increase the resource available for the scheme during the remainder of this financial year.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) males and (b) females have acquired qualifications, listed by category, under the YTS, by region, since its inception.

Mr. Cope: The table shows the percentage of leavers by region gaining qualifications in the most recent full year, April 1985 to March 1986. Information is not available for previous years and not yet available for 1986-87.

For the purposes of this table, leavers who gained more than one type of qualification were counted once only, according to the highest category of qualification gained during their YTS training. The percentage in all but the first column may therefore understate the proportion of leavers who gained a qualification in that category.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he now has final figures for the number of entrants to YTS in 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission has released figures today which show that there were 406,332 starts to YTS in 1985-86.

Cumulative figures at the end of each month were as follows:

	Number
1985
April	14,729
May	27,265
June	89,424
July	171,648
August	228,072
September	324,677
October	348,609
November	363,611
December	371,024
1986
January	387,213
February	396,372
March	406,332
Total for year	406,332

The figures represent the actual number of scheme "starts" including second and subsequent starts where trainees have transferred between schemes. We estimate that the number of individuals entering YTS is some 10 per cent. lower than the figures for starts in the table.

These figures differ from those published during 1985-86 because they include notifications of starts which had not been received by the time that the monthly statistics were announced.

Enterprise Agencies

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Employment what support he will give to the North Devon enterprise agency.

Mr. Cope: I welcome the recent launch of the North Devon enterprise agency, which was formed through the merger of two small local enterprise agencies in the area; its formation will assist in the consolidation of the local enterprise agency network in the area. In support of the agency I am pleased to be able to announce that it has been awarded a grant of £20,000 under the Department of Employment's local enterprise agency grant scheme.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is in the table. The data used in compiling the figures derive from central service-wide personnel records and there are some differences from published manpower totals.

Disabled People

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will require the Manpower Services Commission to monitor, record and publish by area the number of disabled people who (a) apply for and (b) secure places on the job training scheme.

Mr. Cope: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

New Workers Scheme

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones asked the Secretary of State for employment if he will publish information showing the total number of jobs covered so far by the new workers scheme together with average wages paid; and if he will also provide a breakdown by sector of this information indicating, in particular, the number of new workers scheme jobs in (a) hotel and catering and (b) hairdressing.

Mr. Lee: Since the new workers scheme began in April last year 41,863 applications have been approved. The average weekly wage paid to employees under the scheme is not available. However, to qualify for support employers must pay young people no more than a gross weekly average of £60 if aged under 20, or £65 if aged 20, on the day they start the job to be supported.

A breakdown of the number of applications approved since the scheme began, by standard industrial classification division, is provided in the table. The hotel and catering sector is included in division No. 6, and the hairdressing sector in division No. 9. A more detailed breakdown is not available.

Applications approved April 1986 to end June 1987

Job Creation

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his answer of 13 July, Official Report, column 347, he will publish evidence, or place it in the Library, that current employment protection legislation deters employers from creating new jobs; whether he will estimate how many potential jobs have not been created because of this; and what plans he has to seek to amend such legislation.

Mr. Nicholls: Results of two studies by the Department of Employment were published as research papers 6 and 53, and were placed in the Library. It is not possible to estimate the effect on job opportunities, since the employment legislation is one of many factors to be considered by an employer. The White Paper "Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers" contained several proposals to amend the legislation, but these are still being considered.

Hairdressing Industry

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide data from the 1986 "New Earnings Survey" showing what proportion of workers in the hairdressing occupational category received incentive payments; and what was the average weekly value of those payments per worker.

Mr. Lee: Estimates from the "New Earnings Survey" indicate that in April 1986 in Great Britain just over a third of full-time adults employed as hairdressers and whose earnings were not affected by absence received payment-by-results or similar payments. These averaged £25·50 per week gross for each employee receiving such payments.

YOP and YTS

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will detail the number and percentage of YOP and YTS graduates who (a) gain unemployment, (b) go on to further training and (c) return to (i) full-time and (ii) part-time education, (d) become unemployed and (e) went on to other destinations for each of the last 10 years; and if these dates can be further analysed by social class of the graduates' parents.

Mr. Cope: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Women (Earnings)

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest figures showing how many women in paid work earned below the national insurance threshold.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated from the latest "New Earnings Survey" results that only about one fifth of 1 per cent. of full-time female employees have gross weekly earnings below the national insurance threshold. The survey results do not cover all part-time employees but, taken with other data, it is estimated that in April 1986 about 2 million female part-time employees in Great Britain had gross weekly earnings below the limit for national insurance purposes.

South Africa

Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to extend the voluntary ban on the promotion of tourism to South Africa to include Namibia.

Mr. Lee: We have no plans to do so. The issues surrounding Namibia and South Africa are quite separate.

Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline the actions taken by Her Majesty's Government to implement the voluntary ban on tourism to South Africa as agreed by the Prime Minister at the Commonwealth review meeting in August 1986; and whether any mechanisms have been established to monitor this voluntary ban.

Mr. Lee: The action we have taken to implement the Government's voluntary ban on promotion of tourism to South Africa was set out by my hon. Friend, the previous Minister with responsibility for tourism, in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Ravensbourne (Mr. Hunt) on 30 October 1986 at column 213.

The onus for deciding whether to comply with the measure or not must be with the organisation concerned.

Wider Opportunities Training Programme

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the amount of money by which funding of the wider opportunities training programme is to be reduced; when this reduction will start; how many places on the programme will be lost; and what is his estimate as to how many of the places lost will be for women and how many for men.

Mr. Cope: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Travel-to-work Areas

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Employment on what occasions there have been general reviews of travel-to-work areas; and if he will list all changes that have been made to any of the travel-to-work areas between the reviews in each case.

Mr. Lee: Since 1960 (when the concept of travel-to-work areas was first introduced for producing unemployment rates) travel-to-work areas have been reviewed on three occasions—in 1968, 1978 and 1984. These reviews were to take account of the latest information on travel-to-work patterns from the censuses of population conducted in 1961, 1971 and 1981, respectively.

Information on changes to travel-to-work areas between reviews before the 1984 review is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Since the 1984 review a minor revision has been made to the boundary between Llanelli and Swansea travel-to-work areas following a revision to the relevant 1981 Census of Population data. Also the names of three travel-to-work areas have been changed: St. Andrews became North-East Fife, Flint and Rhyl become Shotton, Flint and Rhyl and Ebbw Vale and Abergavenny became Blaenau Gwent and Abergavenny.

Disposable Income

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the distribution of aggregate disposable income of selected groups of households for 1979 and 1985 using the family expenditure surveys of 1979 and 1985 (table 25) on a comparable basis, taking into account the change in housing benefit and the introduction of mortgage interest relief at source.

Mr. Lee: The exact information requested is available only at disproportionate cost. However, provision was made in analysis of the 1983 family expenditure survey (when the introduction of the housing benefit scheme necessitated a change of income definition) to provide results on two bases. The figures show 1985 and 1983 distributions from the family expenditure survey on the current basis.

Agricultural Inspectors

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will now appoint additional agricultural inspectors to the Health and Safety Executive, to enable the executive to fulfil its role in enforcing the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 and the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986; whether he will make additional financial resources available to the executive, to assist it in carrying out its responsibilities under the Act; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive intends to meet its responsibilities for enforcing the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 and the control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 from within existing staff resources through a rearrangement of priorities. It is hoped that further recruitment to the agricultural inspectorate will take place later in the year.

For 1987-88 Parliament has voted grant-in-aid for the Health and Safety Executive of £1 million more than was shown as planned provision in the public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 56, and this provision was intended to include the costs of carrying out its responsibilities under the Act. Planned provision for future years is currently under consideration.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of time spent in Prison Department establishments for persons detained under Immigration Act powers during 1986.

Mr. Renton: The average period of detention in Prison Department establishments in England and Wales of persons initially received under the Immigration Act 1971 powers who were discharged in 1986 was about four weeks.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were received into Prison Department establishments under Immigration Act powers during 1986 by individual prison establishments.

Mr. Renton: The readily available information is given in the following table:

Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the numbers of immigrants each year from 1979 to date who have legally gained admission as immigrants to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: The numbers of persons granted settlement in the United Kingdom in each year from 1976 to 1986 are published in table 18 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom 1986" (Cm. 166), copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is available regarding the numbers of individuals who have entered the United Kingdom as illegal immigrants each year since 1979.

Mr. Renton: The available information, which relates to illegal entrants detected and dealt with, is summarised in table 22 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom 1986" (Cm. 166), copies of which are in the Library.

Police (Newham)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many policemen stationed in the London borough of Newham live in the borough.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Eighty-seven.

Juries (London)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take in response to the recent statement by the assistant commissioner of the Metropolitan police concerning the activities of alleged jury nobblers in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Protection of jurors is an operational matter for chief officers. The police are aware of the dangers, particularly in major trials involving organised crime, and if necessary seek the authority of the trial judge to provide police protection for the jurors in order to prevent any interference. However, the available evidence does not suggest that jury nobbling is a widespread practice or that a change in the law is needed.

Prisoners (Restraints)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take in response to the suggestion by coroner Sir Montague Levine that his Department should take steps to prevent further deaths arising from the use on prisoners of body belts as restraints; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that Sir Montague Levine, who conducted the inquest, will be writing to the Department shortly about this unfortunate case. It would not be sensible to comment on the case or its implications for policy on the management of violent prisoners until Sir Montague's report and other relevant papers have been fully considered.

Prisoners (Suicide Risks)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish new guidelines concerning the supervision by prison officers of known suicide risks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Revised instructions to Prison Department establishments on suicide prevention, including supervision procedures, are set out in circular instruction 3/1987, published in February, a copy of which is in the Library. These new procedures, in conjunction with the staff training programme already under way, should improve the prison service's ability to identify and help potential suicide victims.

Prevention of Terrorism

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons have been charged in England and Wales under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act; and how many have been convicted;

(2) how many persons have been detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act in England and Wales at the latest date;

(3) how many persons have been charged in Liverpool under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act; and how many have been convicted;

(4) how many persons have been detained (a) in Liverpool and (b) on Merseyside under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act at the latest date.

Mr. Hurd: Information on detentions up to the first quarter of 1987 by police force area is published in table 3 of Home Office "Statistical Bulletin" issue 11/87 and on charges and convictions up to 31 December 1986 in "Statistical Bulletin" issue 2/87. All detention by Merseyside police since May 1985 were recorded centrally as having taken place in Liverpool. Information on charges and their outcome for those detained in Merseyside was given to the hon. Member in reply to his question on 16 March 1987, at columns 361-62. Further information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons who were arrested in Liverpool under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act could have been charged under other legislation.

Mr. Hurd: It is not possible to say how many persons arrested under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 in any area could have been charged under other legislation at the time they were arrested.

Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to respond to the recommendations made by Viscount Colville of Culross in his review of the operation during 1986 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have considered very carefully the recommendation made by Viscount Colville on the use of the exclusion power in the Prevention of Terrorism Act. I have decided that it would not be wise now to discontinue the powers in sections 4, 5 and 6 of the Act. I shall keep the matter under review in the light of any comments Viscount Colville makes in his report on the Act as a whole to be published later this year.

Viscount Colville made several important points on the administration of the Act both by the police and Government Departments. We have accepted his recommendations on a number of these points and a copy of a letter to chief officers of police will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Hurd: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Miss Paula Otemah

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the representations he has received supporting the release of Miss Paula Otemah from prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have received no such representations, though I am aware of the early-day motion standing in the name of the hon. Member, and other hon. Members, and of the hon. Member's approach to the governor of Risley remand centre.

Detainees (Police Cells)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) by what date he expects the 648 unconvicted prisoners being held in police station cells on 10 July to be transferred to prison;

(2) when he expects those police officers currently guarding unconvicted prisoners held in police cells on 10 July to be able to return to normal police duties.

Mr. John Patten: Rollestone camp will open as a temporary prison on 3 August and receive its complement of 360 prisoners over the following two to three weeks. The camp is not suitable for accommodating remand prisoners and therefore cannot, itself, receive untried prisoners from police cells. Instead, it will draw from overcrowded local prisons in the south-east.

Shortly afterwards a substantial number of places will become available in local prisons nationally as a result of the changes in remission arrangements for offenders serving short sentences.

It is not possible to say with certainty when all unconvicted prisoners will be removed from police cells and therefore when police officers looking after them may return to normal duties. Both measures listed above will free places in the prisons so that they can take prisoners from police cells. This will begin to happen shortly after 3 August.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the west midlands as to how many west midlands police officers are currently employed in guarding unconvicted prisoners held in police cells; how many such prisoners were being held on 10 July; and how that compares with the numbers held at the same date one and two years ago, respectively.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have asked the chief constable of the west midlands to let me have such information as is available and will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Firearms

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement regarding the accuracy of his Department's index to all letters and circulars issued since 1967, concerning the administration of the Firearms Act 1968, sent by his Department to chief officers of police;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of all circulars issued by the Home Office since 1967, concerning the administration of the Firearms Act 1968, to chief officers of police;

(3) if he will place a copy in the Library of his Department's index to all letters and circulars issued since 1967, concerning the administration of the Firearms Act 1968, sent by his Department to chief officers of police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The only list which relates to circulars and letters issued since 1967 specifically about firearms controls is an informal document prepared for internal reference purposes. This list was supplied recently to an appellant's counsel to assist him in the identification of any material relevant to an appeal to the Crown court, Newport, against refusal of a firearms certificate. It is the practice to place a copy of all circulars on firearms matters in the Library.

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of all standard letters issued by his Department since 1967, concerning the administration of the Firearms Act 1968, to chief officers of police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The contents of such letters and of circulars to chief officers of police that remain of current application have been consolidated in a revised memorandum for the guidance of the police on the administration of the Firearms Act 1968. This has been sent to major shooting organisations for comments. I shall place a copy in the Library when it has been finalised.

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the 1972 Sir John McKay report, "The Control of Firearms in Great Britain: A Consultative Document", issued to all chief officers of police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The report of Sir John McKay's working party on the control of firearms, prepared in 1972, was an internal document. Its main conclusions and recommendations were incorporated in the 1973 Green Paper, "The Control of Firearms in Great Britain" (Cmnd. 5297). It has no bearing on the way in which the Firearms Act 1968 is currently administered by chief officers of police.

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firearms and shotgun certificates were on issue and how many dealers were registered in 1986 in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Metropolitan police district; how these figures compared with those for previous years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The position at 31 December each year was as follows:

Police Manpower

Mr. Churchill asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, in order of priority, the principal factors taken into consideration by his Department in assessing authorised police manpower levels in different police force areas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Each application for an increase in the authorised establishment of a force is considered as a whole, but we take into account such factors as the police-population ratio, the level of crime, the purpose for which the additional posts are required and the civilian staff levels within the force. The importance of these factors will vary with the circumstances of each individual case.

Crime-Police Manpower Statistics

Mr. Churchill asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police authorities in England and Wales in order of their ratio of recorded crimes for the year 1986 to authorised police manpower for that year; and if he will further list the actual figures of reported crimes and police manpower levels in each case.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The authorised establishment and actual strength of each police force in England and Wales as at 31 December 1986 are published in the report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary for 1986 (appendix 7), and the number of notifiable offences recorded by each force is published in Home Office "Statistical Bulletin" issue number 4/87 (table 6), copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Antonas Gecas

Mr. Winninck asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what documentary evidence has been received by Her Majesty's Government from (a) overseas Governments and (b) other sources regarding the wartime activities of Mr. Antonas Gecas; and when the Government will be reaching a conclusion of the outcome of such evidence;

(2) to what specific alleged Nazi wartime crimes the documentary evidence received by Her Majesty's Government relating to Mr. Antonas Gecas refers;

(3) what representations have been made to him seeking the extradition of Mr. Antonas Gecas for alleged Nazi wartime crimes against humanity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: On 7 July representatives of the Simon Wiesenthal Centre gave the Department a substantial volume of documentary material in support of their allegation that Mr. Gecas had been involved in crimes of mass murder during the Nazi occupation of Lithuania. We have also examined other documents identified in the original list of names which the centre sent us last November. We are studying the recent material in order to assess the scope for further action. No request for the extradition of Mr. Gecas has been received.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances Mr. Antonas Gecas was given British citizenship; what information he gave at that time regarding his activities during the last war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Mr. Gecas was granted citizenship of the United Kingdom and Colonies in 1956 following an application for naturalisation under section 10(1) of the British Nationality Act 1948. The information which he supplied at that time will now be examined alongside the material handed to my Department on 17 July by the Simon Wisenthal centre.

Citizenship

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy towards the removal of British citizenship from a naturalised citizen found to have been involved in Nazi wartime crimes against humanity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The circumstances of any particular case would be considered in accordance with the provisions of section 40 of the British Nationality Act 1981.

Operation Trident

Mr. Boateng asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what quantity of prohibited drugs has been seized in the course of Operation Trident from its inception to the present date; and what is the breakdown by weight and class of these drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As the drugs seized during the operation are now being analysed, the information requested is not yet available.

Mr. Boateng asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total cost of Operation Trident from its inception to the present date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that this information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, it is likely that the total additional costs of the operation were small.

Mr. Boateng asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commisssioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many arrests have taken place in the course of Operation Trident in the All Saints road area of Notting Hill from its inception to the present date; what is the breakdown, by reference to the race code used by the Metropolitan police, of those arrests; how many charges have arisen from those arrests; and what is the breakdown by nature of those charges.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that a total of 263 arrests had been made in the course of Operation Trident up to 21 July. Statistics on the ethnic background of those arrested are not centrally recorded. 73 people have been charged and 56 cautioned following arrest. Details are provided in the following table:

Number of persons charged in Operation Trident by nature of charge

	Charged	Cautioned
Drugs Supply	17	—
Possession of an offensive weapon	4	1
Burglary	1	—
Theft	5	—
Handling Stolen Goods	3	—

Excess Alcohol	8	—
Obstructing Police and Highway	16	—
Assault Police	1	—

	Charged	Cautioned
Going equipped to steal	1	—
Other	7	7
Total	73	56

Mr. Boateng asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many officers have been deployed, in total, in the course of Operation Trident, from its inception to the present date; what is the maximum number of officers deployed in any one day; and what divisions these officers have been drawn from, broken down by numbers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that information about the total number of officers deployed on the operation is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The maximum number of officers deployed directly on the operation at any one time was 88 on Friday 3 July. The officers involved in the operation have been drawn from all areas of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Boateng asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has called for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on Operation Trident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The conduct of Operation Trident is an operational matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. I have, however, asked the Commissioner for information in relation to the questions asked by the hon. Member.

Parole

Mr. Boateng asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, since the change in parole policy announced in 1983, how many prisoners serving five years or more for offences of drug trafficking or violence have been released before the last few months of their sentence because of exceptional circumstances; what these exceptional circumstances have been; and how many prisoners have been released in each year since the commencement of the policy for the above reasons.

Mr. John Patten: The more restricted policy on parole to which the hon. Member refers has been applied to prisoners serving sentences of over five years for offences of violence or drug trafficking. As recorded in successive annual reports of the Parole Board, the numbers of cases in which, exceptionally, prisoners have been granted parole other than for a few months at the end of their sentence are:

	Number
1984	[1]23
1985	13
[2]1986	34

[1] This figure also covers December 1983.
[2] The latest date for which figures are available.

It is not possible to generalise about the reasons for considering that circumstances of a case are sufficiently exceptional to provide grounds for the grant of parole under the policy. Each case is considered on its individual merits.

War Criminals

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the bringing to justice of United Kingdom inhabitants held responsible for Nazi crimes against humanity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The policy of successive Governments has been that those accused of serious crimes committed abroad should be extradited, provided the requirements of our law are met. Last week I received from the Simon Wisenthal Centre documentary material in support of allegations that people responsible for war crimes are living in this country. I am examining this material in order to assess the scope for further action.

Home Office Circulars

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those to whom his Department has circulated Home Office circular 46/87, FRM 85/1/24/1; if he will place a copy in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A copy of Hhome circular No. 46/1987 has been sent to all chief officers of police in England and Wales; the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster and Isle of Man constabularies; the Chief Officer of the States of Jersey police; clerks to police authorities; the Association of Chief Police Officers; the Police Federation; the Police Superintendents' Association; the Association of County Councils; the Association of Metropolitan Authorities; the Justices' Clerks' Society; the Director of Public Prosecutions; the Scottish Home and Health Department; the Northern Ireland Office; the British Transport police; the British Museum and the Bodleian Library at Oxford. A copy has also been placed in the Library of the House.

Passports

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many British citizens in each of the last five years have reported their passports (a) lost and (b) stolen in each country by name; and how many such passports have been subsequently recovered.

Mr. Renton: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of United Kingdom standard passports reported lost or stolen overseas from 1984 to 1986, the only period for which information is available, is set out in the following table, by country of reported loss:

Country	1984	1985	1986
Australia	654	688	693
Canada	245	151	145
France	635	n/a	288

Total	11,897	12,118	13,634

The number of such passports reported as having been recovered is as follows:

	Number
1984	566
1985	634
1986	846

Prisoners (Costs)

Mr. Steinberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much it costs to keep one person in prison for one week at (a) Durham prison, (b) Frankland prison and (c) Low Newton remand centre;

(2) how much on average it costs to keep one person in prison for one week in (a) a local prison, (b) a high security prison and (c) a remand centre.

Mr. John Patten: Information on average weekly costs of detention in individual penal establishments and different types of establishment is published in the annual reports on the work of the Prison Department. The latest available information is contained in the 1985-86 report (Cm. 11: see appendix 3, tables E and F), a copy of which is in the Library.

Lion Intoximeter 3000

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there are plans to modify further the Lion Intoximeter 3000 evidential breath-testing instruments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: A number of minor changes, none of which affect the analytical functions of the instruments, are planned. The modifications will correct minor faults with the machine's date and time mechanism (including provision for leap years); provide for self-checking of the acetone detector; and improve memory storage and retrieval. The changes will be carried out in the course of servicing by the manufacturer.

Handscomb and Others (Judgment)

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a further statement about the Government's response to the Divisional Court judgment in the case of Handscomb and others.

Mr. Hurd: As I indicated in reply to a question from the the right hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Millan) on 29 April, the Divisional Court judgment in the case of Handscomb and others upheld the lawfulness of the policy for the release of life sentence prisoners announced in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) on 30 November 1983, at cols. 505-7. One feature of that policy was the change made in the arrangements for fixing the date on the first formal consideration of the case of a life sentence prisoner by the Parole Board machinery. Since 1973 that date had been fixed on the advice of the joint Parole Board/Home Office committee. Under the revised arrangements, however, this review normally takes place three years before the expiry of the time thought necessary to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence and is fixed following consultation with the judiciary on what in their view that time should be. The Divisional Court was critical of two aspects of the way in which that policy has been applied in those cases where a life sentence is awarded at the discretion of the trial judge, that is for offences other than murder (for which the life sentence is mandatory). It concluded that in such cases the consultation with the judiciary on the question of the period necessary to meet the requirements of retribution and deterrence in an individual case should take place as soon as practicable after the imposition of the sentence and should not be delayed for around three to four years as is the case at present; and that, to accord with the stated policy, the first review date in such cases should always be set in accordance with the judicial view on the requirements of retribution and deterrence and account should not be taken of other factors in setting that date.

Under the previous arrangements the joint committee gave initial consideration to the timing of the first formal review of a case by the Parole Board machinery after the prisoner had been detained for about three years. Over the years this arrangement had become less and less effective, with the result that the Committee was recommending a date for a first formal review in only about half the cases referred to it. One of the reasons for adopting the new procedure announced in 1983 was that this element of uncertainty in the system was removed. The decision to consult the judiciary about the requirements of retribution and deterrence for the purpose of fixing the date of the first formal review of a case at the same point at the joint committee had begun its consideration of cases under the previous arrangements was taken with the agreement of the Lord Chief Justice. But on reflection I accept the conclusion of the Divisional Court that there are strong arguments for carrying out this consultation exercise as soon as practicable following the imposition of a discretionary life sentence.

Following consultation with the Lord Chief Justice it has been agreed that the most satisfactory way of obtaining the judicial view is to ask the trial judge to write to me, through him, in every case where a discretionary life sentence is passed giving his view on the period necessary to meet the requirements of retribution and deterrence. This view will be related to the determinate sentence that would have been passed but for the element of mental instability and/or public risk which led the judge to pass a life sentence and will also take account of the notional period of the sentence which a prisoner might expect to have been remitted for good behaviour had a determinate sentence been passed. The date of the first formal review by the Parole Board machinery will then be fixed in accordance with the judicial view on the requirements of retribution and deterrence; and the review will, as before, normally take place three years before the expiry of that period. I have agreed with the Lord Chief Justice that this new procedure will be introduced with effect from 1 October 1987.

Arrangements have also been made to consult the judiciary about those discretionary life sentence cases where the first formal review has not yet been set, with a view to fixing the date as soon as possible. In addition, I shall arrange for a review to be undertaken of all discretionary life sentence cases with a first formal review date of January 1988 or later. Where account has been taken of factors other than the judicial view on the requirements of retribution and deterrence in fixing the date, the date will be adjusted to bring it into line with the judicial view.

Although the issues before the Divisional Court related only to prisoners serving discretionary life sentences, I have decided that the date of the first formal review of the cases of prisoners serving mandatory life sentences should also be fixed as soon as practicable after conviction and sentence. The procedure under which the views of the trial judge and the Lord Chief Justice about the requirements of retribution and deterrence are obtained will be the same as that proposed for discretionary life sentence cases, and will be introduced at the same time. A similar exercise will also be carried out to fix the first review date in outstanding mandatory life sentence cases where this has not already been done. In view of the large number of cases involved (around 750) this will inevitably take some time.

In cases of prisoners serving life sentences for murder, where the sentence is not at the discretion of the court, the question of the notional equivalent determinate sentence does not arise. I shall continue to take into account the view of the judiciary on the requirements of retribution and deterrence in such cases as a factor amongst others (including the need to maintain public confidence in the system of justice) to be weighed in the balance in setting the first review date. I shall ensure that the timing of the first formal review in such cases is fixed in accordance with my overall policy for ensuring that the time served by prisoners serving life sentences for the worst offences of violence fully reflects public concern about violent crime.

As indicated in the November 1983 statement, the setting of the first review date under these arrangements will enable a life sentence prisoner to be released with three years of that date if the parole board so recommends, subject to the policy announced in reply to a question by the then right hon. and learned Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Carlisle) on 1 March 1985 that no life sentence prisoner will be detained for more than 17 years without a formal review of his case even where the period thought necesary to meet the requirements of retribution and deterrence exceeds 20 years. Ministers will continue to review every case where a life sentence prisoner has been detained for 10 years. However, as was made clear by the Divisional court, the release of a life sentence prisoner is solely at my discretion and it is for me to decide, after receiving the Parole Board's recommendation and after consulting the judiciary as required by section 61(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1967, when actual release should take place.

Data Protection

Mr. Fry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what fee he intends to prescribe as the maximum charge for subject access under the Data Protection Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: In setting the maximum fee, I have had to take account, on the one hand, of the needs of data users so far as possible to cover their costs and, on the other, of the requirements of the Council of Europe Data Protection Convention and the importance of preventing the fee from acting as a disincentive to data subjects. As a consequence, I have now decided to fix the maximum fee at £10 and I shall shortly be making the appropriate regulations under the Act. Data users will, of course, be free in individual cases to charge any sum that falls within that maximum.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Constitution

12. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made, in the light of the recent constitutional proposals by the Unionist parties, of the likelihood and implications of the Protestant community invoking Her Majesty's Government's declared undertaking not to stand in the way of a decision by the majority in the Province in favour of independence from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I have made no such assessment. I have no evidence to suggest that a sizeable proportion of the people of Northern Ireland would regard independence as a sensible solution to the problems of the Province, now or in the foreseeable future.

15. Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his talks with Northern Ireland party leaders concerning the constitional future of the Province.

Mr. Tom King: I hope that there can soon be a constructive dialogue, involving all the constitutional political parties, about the future government of Northern Ireland. I therefore welcome the start of exploratory discussions between the unionist leadership and senior officials of my Department.

Teachers

13. Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to remove teachers' negotiating rights in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

22. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he intends to impose a pay and contract settlement on Northern Ireland teachers, along the lines of the imposed settlement in England and Wales.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Cross-frontier Incursions

14. Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many protests have been lodged by the Irish Republic' Government since 15 November 1985 concerning cross-frontier incursions by the Army or the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Since 15 November 1985 the Irish Government has brought to our attention 78 occasions in which members of our security forces have allegedly crossed the border into the Republic of Ireland. Of these the British authorities have admitted 47; 22 have been denied, six are under investigation, and three others could not be pursued because of insufficient information. I understand how easy it is for members of the security forces operating near the border to make mistakes and accidentally stray outside their respective jurisdictions, as has happened in the case of the security forces of both countries.

General Election

16. Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons in Northern Ireland were refused ballot papers at the recent general election because they did not have the necessary identification.

Mr. Stanley: These statistics were not collected at the polling stations in Northern Ireland during the recent general election, but the proportion of the electorate who were refused ballot papers because they did not have the necessary identification is thought to have been very small.

Job Losses

17. Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many jobs are estimated to have been lost in Northern Ireland through terrorism and intimidation in 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 to date.

Mr. Stanley: We have not made any such estimates, but there is no doubt that terrorism has materially contributed to unemmployment in the Province.

Local Government

18. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next intends to review the system of local government in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: I am not at the moment undertaking a review of local government. However, as my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, indicated in the debate on 7 July, this is one of the matters that could arise in any talks about the future government of Northern Ireland.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

19. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions are now taking place between the Governments of the Republic of Ireland and the United Kingdom on the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I last met Irish Ministers at a meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference on 16 July. As is set out in the joint statement issued after the meeting, a copy of which is in the Library, we discussed a range of matters within the field of activity of the Conference, including security and economic co-operation and equality of opportunity in employment.

Schoolchildren (Community Relations)

20. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to take further measures to promote better community relations between schoolchildren in the Province.

Dr. Mawhinney: Yes. I am conscious of the need for increased effort on this front and I hope to announce our intentions shortly.

Youth Services

21. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement concerning the future of the Northern Ireland youth services following the consultation process which ended in June 1986.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am not yet able to make a full statement, but for the future I would wish to secure clearer objectives for young people to reach maturity through self development, enterprise and cross-community service.

Security

23. Mr. Kilfedder asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the security situation.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Gentleman the Member for Antrim, South (Mr. Forsythe), earlier today.

Flags and Emblems

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy on the removal of flags and emblems from roads, footpaths and other buildings within his control.

Mr. Stanley: It is a matter for the operational judgment of the RUC to take whatever steps are necessary to prevent a breach of the peace arising from the provocative display of any flag or emblem.

As far as the flying of the Union flag from Government buildings in the Province is concerned, the practice is broadly in line with that in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Prison Officers (Stress)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the level of pastoral care and psychological help to handle stress available to prison officers in the Northern Ireland prison service.

Mr. Stanley: The Prison Department offers prison officers a range of services designed to help those who find it difficult to cope with any personal problems.

It employs trained welfare officers who provide an advisory and guidance service to staff on a wide range of matters and who refer staff to outside agencies or experts for further help. It also obtains advice from the medical advisory service of the Department of Health and Social Services on the health of individual officers and on the occupational health needs of the service. MAS also offers a direct and personal service to staff experiencing health or occupational health problems. More generally management both in the prisons and in headquarters is available to assist individual officers with any problem and can call upon expert medical and other help as necessary.

Social Workers, Residential Care and Teaching Staff

Mr. Kilfedder asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether there has been any change in policy towards the training of social workers, residential care and teaching staff within the training schools establishment in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: No. The Department will continue to permit such staff to have leave of absence for further training where this is justified and practical.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Kilfedder asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average period of time which patients have to wait before admission to the Royal Victoria hospital, the City hospital and the Ulster hospital, excluding emergency cases.

Mr. Needham: From the information routinely collected, it is not possible to calculate an average waiting time. The period of time spent on the waiting list varies from specialty to specialty. The table gives an analysis of waiting time for each specialty which has a waiting list at the three hospitals.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Stanley: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Education Costs

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent by local authorities on (a) school transport and (b) school meals in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the comparable figures for each year since 1978-79 in cash terms and real terms using 1986-87 prices and using an index of 100 for 1978-79;

(2) what is the latest figure for expenditure per pupil on books and on equipment in (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) special schools; and what are the comparable figures for each of the years since 1978-79, in cash terms and real terms using 1986-87 prices and using an index of 100 for 1978-79.

Dr. Mawhinney: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Land Restoration

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total expenditure by way of grant-aid under the agriculture improvement scheme on land restoration in the Province, in the financial years 1985-86 and 1986-87; and whether such grants are paid in respect of heathland and moorland.

Mr. Viggers: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mourne Mountains and Slieve Croob

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he plans to designate parts of the Mourne Mountains and Slieve Croob as an environmentally sensitive area; what sites he is currently considering for designation as environmentally sensitive areas in Northern Ireland in 1988; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Land Reclamation

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total expenditure by way of grant-aid on land reclamation in the Province, and the number of payments made, in the financial year 1986-87, under (a) the farm capital grant scheme, (b) the farm and horticulture development scheme, (c) the agriculture and horticulture grant scheme and (d) the agriculture and horticulture development scheme.

Mr. Viggers: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Water Pollution

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidents of water pollution by farm wastes were recorded in each of the years 1980 to 1986, and in 1987 to date, in Northern Ireland; how many of these incidents were attributable to pollution by silage effluent, and by slurry; and how many of these incidents were the subject of warning letters and prosecutions.

Mr. Needham: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the 1987-88 running cost limit for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments.

Mr. Tom King: The running costs limit for 1987-88 for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is being set at £476·762 million. Further details for provision for individual departments are set out in the appropriate Estimates volumes.

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the cash limit for Northern Ireland departmental services for 1987-88.

Mr. Tom King: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary associated Supplementary Estimates, the cash limit for Northern Ireland Departmental Services (NIO1) for 1987-88 has been increased by £22·0 million from £2,425·9 million to £2,447·8 million. This reflects additions of: £3·2 million in respect of a final assessment of the net changes to the Northern Ireland programme to reflect changes in comparable programmes in England in the 1986 public expenditure survey; £13 million following the decision to implement the recommendations of the NHS Pay Bodies; £4 million to cover arrears of teachers pay following the agreement between Department of Education (NI) and the teachers unions in Northern Ireland; £1·7 million in respect of employment measures announced earlier in the year and £1·1 million in respect of university academic pay, both consistent with Great Britain treatment. This gross increase of £23 million is offset by the transfer of a total of £1 million to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Agriculture for Scotland for the purchase of milk quotas. The total net increase of £22 million is being met from the reserve and does not therefore add to the public expenditure planning total.

Draft Matrimonial and Family Proceedings (Northern Ireland) Order

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which organisations and individuals made representations or submissions concerning the Draft Matrimonial and Family Proceedings (Northern Ireland) Order; and, of these, which opposed and which supported provisions in the order relating to financial relief.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 16 July 1987, c. 638]: Representations or submissions on the proposal for a Draft Matrimonial and Family Proceedings (Northern Ireland) Order were made by the following organisations:

Belfast Law Centre[1]
Belfast Solicitors' Association
The Building Societies Association
The Catholic Bishops whose dioceses cover Northern Ireland
Christian Marriage Committee of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland[2]
Church of Ireland Board for Social Responsibility (Northern Ireland)
Gingerbread (Northern Ireland)[2]
Inner Wheel Club of Coleraine[2]
The Law Society of Northern Ireland
Northern Ireland Association of Socialist Lawyers[2]
Northern Ireland Marriage Guidance Council[2] and by 47 individuals. (44 expressly opposed the provisions on financial relief: three supported them).

PRIME MINISTER

Greenock Container Terminal

Q22. Dr. Godman asked the Prime Minister what assessment she has made of the implications for employment opportunities in the Greenock area of the proposed closure of the Greenock container terminal; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The decision to close the Greenock container terminal is a matter for the commercial judgment of the Clyde port authority. The Greenock area already benefits from the activities of the Inverclyde initiative and from the full range of support by the Manpower Services Commission. The additional measures announced recently by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland to support the initiative will help further to strengthen the efforts to create new employment opportunities in Inverclyde.

Afghanistan

Q51. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Prime Minister if she will meet Dr. Najib, President of Afghanistan.

The Prime Minister: No.

Q67. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if, during her recent visit to Moscow, either Mr. Gorbachev or Mr. Sheverdnaze, the Soviet Foreign Minister, raised with her the question of supplies of Blowpipe missiles to the resistance forces in Afghanistan; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made on 2 April, at columns 1223-25.

Cabotage

Q77. Sir David Price asked the Prime Minister if, in the light of the declared intention of the European Council of Ministers to complete the internal market of the Community by the end of the decade, she will indicate what progress she has made in persuading the other European Governments to give the same rights of cabotage to British ships as the United Kingdom accords to theirs.

The Prime Minister: The Transport Council was not able to agree last December to the liberalisation of cabotage trade as part of the first stage of a Community shipping policy achieved under the United Kingdom's presidency. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is therefore considering options for redressing the present imbalance of access to cabotage markets, including mounting a case in the European Court of Justice. It is patently unfair that some European Governments should be able to reserve their cabotage trade to domestic operators when other Governments like the United Kingdom, operate an open cabotage market.

Mr. William Powell asked the Prime Minister if she will list in the Official Report the names of all those Members of the House of Lords nominated to sit therein since 9 May 1979, together with the dates upon which they took their seats.

Pension Schemes

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Prime Minister if she will take steps to improve the co-ordination between the Inland Revenue and the Department of Health and Social Security in regard to the regulation and supervision of private sector pension schemes; and if she will clarify the status, powers and responsibilities of the Occupational Pensions Board.

The Prime Minister: I have noted my hon. Friend's proposal, but I have no reason to believe that the present relationship between the two Departments in this respect is unsatisfactory. The Occupational Pensions Board, an independent statutory body constituted under the Social Security Act 1973, has certain limited responsibilities for occupational pensions under that Act, the Social Security Pensions Act 1975 and the Social Security Act 1986.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Prime Minister what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in the Cabinet Office and her Private Office in each year since 1979.

Inner Cities

Mr. Wareing asked the Prime Minister what form co-ordination will take between the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment in respect of Government policies for the inner cities.

The Prime Minister: Co-ordination, both between departments and between the Government and other local bodies, is important to the success of our policies for the inner cities. Effective machinery to secure this co-operation already exists in the urban programme partnerships, the city action teams and the inner cities initiative.

Telecommunications

Mr. Douglas asked the Prime Minister whether, in her meetings with President Reagan, she had an opportunity of discussing the effect upon British and American telecommunications interests of further delay in negotiations for the second KKD international telecommunications network in Japan.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Arundel (Mr. Marshall) yesterday.

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Prime Minister whether she had an opportunity of discussing with President Reagan the common interests of the United Kingdom and the United States of America in a speedy resolution to the negotiations for the second KDD international telecommunications network in Japan.

The Prime Minister: No. The United States administration, however, are well aware of our views.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Allen asked the Prime Minister if she will obtain for the Library of 10 Downing street a copy of the book, "Spycatcher", by Mr. Peter Wright.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister (1) whether it was with her authority that at 4 pm on Wednesday 8 July, the Treasury Solicitor's Office telephoned Theodore Goddard, solicitors for The Sunday Times, to ask for an undertaking by 5.30 pm that afternoon not to publish further extracts from Mr. Peter Wright's book "Spycatcher"; and if she will make a statement;

(2) whether it was with her authority that around 3 pm on Wednesday 8 July the Treasury Solicitor's Office telephoned Theodore Goddard, solicitors for The Sunday Times, indicating an intention later that afternoon to ask them for an undertaking not to publish further extracts from Mr. Peter Wright's book "Spycatcher"; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) on 20 July, at column 16.

Mr. Rooker asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 July.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

ENERGY

Nuclear Technology

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the prospects for the sale of (a) nuclear reactors, (b) nuclear reprocessing technologies and (c) enriched uranium to countries (i) within or (ii) outside the European Community in the next year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Assessment of sales prospects is a matter for the commercial organisations concerned.

Coal Imports

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the level of coal imports for the last 12 months (a) by country of origin, (b) by tonnage and (c) by cost per tonne.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Coal imports into the United Kingdom during the period May 1986 to April 1987 inclusive (the latest 12 months for which statistics are currently available) were as shown in the following table.

Country of Origin	'000 tonnes	Average cost per tonne £
Australia	3614	36·84
USA	3267	37·36
Poland	1082	41·44
Canada	445	35·65
Federal Republic of Germany	333	105·69
Netherlands	203	38·17

Bulgaria	144	33·84
Soviet Union	37	31·35
Colombia	31	36·72
France	23	60·05

Country of Origin	'000 tonnes	Average cost per tonne £
China	23	89·61
German Democratic Republic	19	22·84
Eire	11	69·64
Other Countries[2]	29	59·05
Total	3588	40·24

[1] At the United Kingdom port of entry.
[2] Nine countries, each of which supplied less than 10,000 tonnes of coal to the United Kingdom in the period May 1986 to April 1987.
[3] Total differs from sum of components due to rounding.

Most of the coal imported into the United Kingdom is anthracite and coking coal rather than ordinary steam coal. Anthracite (naturally smokeless coal with a high heat content per tonne) commands a particularly high price. It is imported from a variety of countries and represents most of the coal imported from West Germany and China during the 12 months in question.

Coal Industry

Mr Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will issue a direction to British Coal to withdraw the new disciplinary code of conduct.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The terms and conditions of employment of mineworkers is a matter for negotiation between the management of British Coal and the mining unions.

Power Station (Fawley)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, in making his decision about the proposed siting by the Central Electricity Generating Board of a 1800MW coal-fired power station at Fawley, he will take into account a possible source of pollution dangers to those communities who live downwind from Fawley on the east side of Southampton Water and the potential risk to the Hamble river; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has not yet received any application from the Central Electricity Generating Board for consent for the construction of a coal-fired power station at Fawley. If such an application is made, he will take all relevant points into account in reaching his decision.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Parkinson: The numbers of (a) women and (b) men employed in my Department in each year since 1979 are as follows:

Nuclear Incidents

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to request the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate to update the quarterly notifications of incidents and accidents for the period July 1982 to May 1987 using the new criteria for reporting incidents reported to the House on 30 April.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The quarterly statements issued by the Health and Safety Executive have already reported all incidents having significance or potential significance for the health and safety of the work force at nuclear installations or for the general public during the period specified.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he proposes to allow new providers of electricity generation for either own-use or for sale to operate in the wake of the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Yes.

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Energy how he intends to meet any expediture arising from his proposal to privatise the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Parkinson: Parliamentary approval for expenditure on this new service will be sought in a Supplementary Supply Estimate for the Department of Energy. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate he has made of the cost of providing extra facilities to transmit surplus electricity generated in Scotland to the grid serving England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the two utilities concerned.

British Gas (Privatisation)

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish an estimate of the amount of money spent advertising the sale of British Gas for privatisation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to publish the sums paid to individual advisers or contractors in a privatisation. Overall marketing costs to the Government, which included the share information office, prospectus printing and despatch and the customer mailing as well as the advertising, were £35 million before VAT.

It was money well spent. The activities involved played a vital role in preparing the market prior to setting the price for British Gas shares. A change of just one penny in the share price was equivalent to £40 million.

UKAEA (Nuclear Research and Development)

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make available summaries of his Department's programme letters in respect of its funding of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's nuclear research and development programmes.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have today placed copies in the Library.

Energy Technologies

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information is publicly available on the appraisal of different energy technologies.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am today placing in the Library of the House Energy Paper 54 "Energy Technologies for the United Kingdom — 1986 Appraisal of Research, Development and Demonstration". This is a comprehensive assessment of a wide range of different energy technologies covering virtually all those currently considered to be relevant for the United Kingdom.

ESCOM (South Africa)

Mr. Boateng asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether all uranium imported into the United Kingdom from (a) South Africa and (b) Namibia is treated as covered by the International Atomic Energy or Euratom safeguards.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 17 July 1987, c. 647-48]: All uranium imported into the United Kingdom for civil use is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the UK/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement.

Mr. Boateng asked the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the total uranium stockpile held in the United Kingdom is under International Atomic Energy Authority or Euratom safeguards.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 17 July 1987, c. 647-48]: All civil uranium in the United Kingdom is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the UK/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement.

Mr. Boateng asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will place in the Library any correspondence between (a) Her Majesty's Government and the European Commissioners and (b) between Her Majesty's Government and the Australian and Canadian attaches to the European Community on the matter of the application of nuclear safeguards to uranium imports to the EEC for use in the United Kingdom in each case since May 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 17 July 1987, c. 647-48]: No. Correspondence between the United Kingdom Government, the European Commission and the Australian or Canadian Governments is confidential to the parties concerned.

Nuclear Waste

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on returning nuclear waste arising in low, intermediate and high-level categories from the reprocessing of (a) imported thermal oxide fuel and (b) imported magnox fuel to each country of origin, what are the volumes involved in each waste category for contracts for spent nuclear fuel imported for reprocessing so far signed; and if he will make a statement on the impact on Nirex of managing spent nuclear fuel imported for reprocessing from other countries.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Energy what commercial and national security restrictions currently exist covering the disclosure of information on nuclear waste plutonium contaminated materials, plutonium and depleted uranium following reprocessing after discharge from power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the hon. Member for Meirionydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 26 and 29 January 1987 at columns 58 and 327, respectively. The reply on 29 January erroneously refers to the date of the other reply as 28 January.

Offshore Technology Board

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will list the members of the Offshore Technology Board, giving their occupations and working backgrounds, their remuneration, and an estimate of how many hours a year, each spend, by name, on the board's behalf.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Sellafield

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about progress by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. in carrying out safety improvements at Sellafield stipulated in the Nuclear Installation Inspectorate's audit reports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Coal Waste

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Energy what commercial restrictions cover the disclosure of information on coal waste from power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Coal ash from power stations is widely used in the construction industry and its availability widely publicised. The sale of such waste is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board which advises me that only the pricing terms of sales contracts are normally kept confidential.

Magnox Reactors

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will update to 31 March 1987 the information on thermal energy generated and spent fuel discharged by Hunterston A station given the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 10 July 1986; and if he will revise the figure for fuel discharged in 1985-86 given in that answer.

Mr. Ian Lang [pursuant to the reply, 2 July 1987, c. 128]: I have been asked to reply. I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that during the financial year 1986-87 the thermal output of Hunterston A was 9,211,936·4 MWh (thermal) and 75·68 tonnes of fuel were discharged. In 1985-86, 96·94 tonnes of fuel were discharged, not 9,694 as previously stated.

ENVIRONMENT

Radioactive Waste

25. Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action he intends to take to mitigate the effects of the discharge of radioactive waste into the Irish sea by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. Moynihan: British Nuclear Fuels plc is undertaking a major investment programme to reduce discharges from Sellafield. As a result of this programme, which will extend into the 1990s, liquid discharges have been reduced to less than a sixth of their 1979 level. Together with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, my Department has introduced a new authorisation limiting radioactive liquid discharges from Sellafield into the sea. The authorisation, which came into effect on 1 July 1986, set tighter annual, quarterly and two-day limits on the overall amounts of radioactivity which may be discharged into the sea and, for the first time, set specific limits on a wide range of individual radionuclides that are of radiological significance or that account for a large proportion of the discharge in activity terms. The authorisation will be reviewed in two or three years' time and again when the current investment programme is completed.

Water Environment

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the numbers of people using the water environment and its surrounds for recreational purposes.

Mr. Moynihan: Membership of organised clubs in Great Britain for the sports of angling, canoeing, rowing, sub aqua, water skiing and sailing in 1985 totalled an estimated 510,000. This figure underestimates the total number of users as it does not take account of casual users of water areas for recreation. Figures from the 1983 general household survey also indicate that this figure is an underestimate.

From the limited data available, it is reckoned that approximately 2 million people per year make use of the water environment for recreation.

Nonconformist Chapels and Meeting Houses

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the 42nd interim report of the Royal Commission on the ancient monuments of England relating to nonconformist chapels and meeting houses; and whether he will list any of those chapels and meeting houses referred to in the report especially worthy of preservation which have been demolished, significantly altered or become disused since its publication.

Mr. Moynihan: Most of the information requested is not held by the Department. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible with as much information as can readily be assembled.

Rating Reform

Mr Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how, under the proposed community charge legislation, he intends to recover unpaid community charges from the unemployed, self employed or retired.

Mr. Howard: The same recovery procedure which currently applies for domestic rates will continue to be available: local authorities will be empowered to seek a court order permitting distraint on goods.

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consult organisations representing the interests of both elderly and disabled people prior to the introduction of a community charge.

Mr. Howard: The Government conducted a major consultation exercise following publication of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714). A number of voluntary and welfare organisations responded to the Green Paper, including Age Concern England, the British Pensioners and Trade Unions Action Association and the Spastics Society.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I are always prepared to listen to the views expressed by such organisations.

Mr. Summerson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment at what intervals property will be revalued for the unified business rate; and if at revaluation the rate in the pound will be adjusted accordingly.

Mr. Howard: There will be a general revaluation of non-domestic property in 1990. It is intended that there should be a further revaluation in 1995 and at intervals of no more than five years thereafter. In a year of revalution, the national non-domestic rate poundage will be adjusted in inverse proportion to the change in aggregate rateable value.

Mr. Summerson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration will be given when revaluing business properties for the introduction of the unified business rates to the possibility that, in some areas, recent substantial rate increases may not have had time to affect rental values.

Mr. Howard: When valuing a property for rating, the valuation office is required to ascertain the rent that a new tenant would be prepared to pay at the relevant date. Although existing rents for comparable properties are taken into account, the valuation officer may adjust them if they no longer reflect current local market conditions.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Cummings asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by county, for each year, from 1976 until 29 February 1984, inclusive, every opencast coal mining application for authorisation that he considered, stating in each case whether or not the relevant local authority formally approved the application and whether or not the application was authorised.

[2] Refused.
[3] Withdrawn.
[4] Replaced by later application.

Prior to 1 March 1984 the Opencast Executive had deemed planning permission for its operations and therefore formal approval by the mineral planning authority did not arise.

Council House Sales

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mrs. C. Ellis of her council home at 24 Crystal Palace road, East Dulwich SE22; and when he now expects Southwark council to complete the transaction.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that Mrs. Ellis is one of many tenants of Southwark council whose right-to-buy application is delayed because the council is still considering how to comply with the new requirements, introduced by the Housing and Planning Act 1986, to notify applicants of known structural defects. My Department is pressing Southwark council to deal with the delays.

Compulsory Purchase

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government are satisfied that the present arrangements for compensation as a result of compulsory purchase are equitable; and what proposals exist to allow for the payment of a sum towards replacement costs of relocation.

Mr. Waldegrave: I believe that the rules in section 5 of the Land Compensation Act 1961 for assessing the market value of properties which have been compulsorily acquired are in general a fair way of establishing the value of what is being taken from the landowner. We have no proposals for changing entitlement to reimbursement of out-of-pocket expenses arising from the move, and to compensation for the value of fixtures which cannot be removed.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the members of the London Docklands Development Corporation; and what are the selection criteria for membership.

Mr. Trippier: The members of the London Docklands Development Corporation are Mr. Christopher Benson (chairman), Mr. John Mills (deputy chairman), Mr. Alan Benjamin, Mrs. Jennifer D'Abo, Sir Andrew Derbyshire, Sir John Garlick, Councillor Jonathan Mathews, Mr. Lewis Moss, Mr. Dennis Stevenson, Mr. Wyndham Thomas, and Mr. Reg Ward (chief executive).

There are currently two vacancies on the board. Members should have relevant experience to the regeneration of urban areas, and the board must include some with special knowledge of the locality.

Housing

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list his powers to determine the number of extra housing units to be built in an area, beyond original proposals by the district; and what factors he has to take into account when prescribing extra construction.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Secretary of State's powers to determine the number of housing units to be built in an area are derived from his approval of county structure plans, as set out in the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, as amended. He may approve them, with or without modifications or reservation, or he may reject them. Structure plans are normally examined in public by a panel under an independent chairman. He weighs all the evidence as well as the panel's recommendations before coming to a decision.

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra housing provision he has called for in the borough of Taunton Deane; when he made this request, and for what reason; whether he specifies the new construction to be in particular areas of the borough; and whether he specifies that account should be taken of non-statutory "green wedges", such as exist in Taunton Deane.

Mr. Waldegrave: The broad provision of housing in the borough of Taunton Deane is set out in the Somerset structure plan. Before the Secretary of State approved the first alteration to it in August 1986 he gave careful consideration to the panel's report of the examination in public. The panel acknowledged that Taunton was a major centre for development and that there were environmental constraints. They recognised the need to restrain housing growth over the district but concluded that an additional 400 dwellings would be justified in Taunton. The Secretary of State agreed.

The detailed location for development is a matter for local plans which, with the structure plan, are the framework for considering planning applications. The Secretary of State is not directly involved in the preparation of local plans, but they have to conform generally to the approved structure plan. Authorities responsible for preparing them have to take account of all material factors, including the need to protect and conserve the environment.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the numbers of houses, also expressed as a percentage of the total, in Oldham and the north-west, and nationally, which are (a) substandard dwellings and unfit, (b) fit but lacking one or more basic amenities and (c) non-substandard dwellings in need of renovation.

Mr. Waldegrave: Local authorities are asked for these figures in their annual housing investment programme returns; the figures are not necessarily comparable as authorities' criteria differ and they are not consistent with national estimates from the English house condition survey 1981.

The figures relating to April 1986 provided by Oldham and estimates for the north-west and for England, including allowance for any missing returns, are as follows:

	Oldham		North-west		England
	Number	Percentage of stock	Number	Percentage of stock	Number	Percentage of stock
Unfit dwellings	4,777	5·5	106,700	3·9	654,000	3·5
Dwellings fit but lacking basic amenities	3,370	3·9	71,600	2·6	501,000	2·7
Non-substandard dwellings in need of renovation[1]	16,206	18·6	508,800	18·8	2,890,000	15·4

[1] Dwellings requiring repairs estimated at more than £3,000 (£4,200 in Greater London).

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in which areas of the United Kingdom levels of nuclear radiation are regularly monitored; and in which areas levels have increased or decreased since the Chernobyl nuclear disaster.

Mr. Moynihan: Regular monitoring is undertaken around major nuclear installations by their operators. National monitoring is also undertaken by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and the National Radiological Protection Board. In all parts of the United Kingdom, background levels increased immediately following the Chernobyl accident but are now decreasing.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he (a) has made or (b) proposes to make in the monitoring of nuclear fallout over the United Kingdom in the wake of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 30 June 1987 at columns 65-67. This explained the main framework of the new contingency plan. The Department is discussing with other organisations how the plan can now be implemented.

Water Supply (Meters)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will estimate (a) the average cost of a current water flow meter and (b) the cost by each water authority area of the installation cost of water meters to each user's premises, by category.

Mr. Moynihan: The size of a meter, and therefore its cost, will depend on the volume of flow it is designed to measure. For a domestic supply, a meter typically costs between £12 and £15. The prime determinant of the installation cost is the nature of the plumbing arrangement of the property being metered rather than the category of property or the area in which it is situated.

Defective Housing

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list by type, numbers and local authority area, the number of homes currently designated by the Housing Defects Act; and which other types of homes are currently being considered for designation under the Act.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information on the distribution, by local authority, of prefabricated reinforced concrete dwellings designed before 1960, designated under the housing defects legislation, was obtained in 1983 and updated in July 1986 to include Smith houses. Copies of this material are in the Library. We are assembling updated information from local authorities on the numbers of designated types (including Boswell). I shall arrange for this to be placed in the Library and a copy sent to the hon. Member when it is available. I have received a representation from the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) concerning the designation of Truscon RD27 houses in Liverpool. We hope to be able to give a decision shortly.

Severn-Trent Water Authority

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average household bill for water rates, by local authority area, levied by the Severn-Trent water authority in each of the last four years.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 29 June 1987 at column 46. The further information requested by the hon. Member is not held centrally.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of households disconnected for non-payment in the Severn-Trent water authority area in each of the last three financial years, detailed by local authority area; how many of those disconnected were (a) pensioners, (b) single parents or (c) disabled or handicapped; and what was the average length of the disconnection period.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay) on 13 July at col. 392. Other information on disconnections is not held centrally.

Palace of Westminster (Asbestos)

Ms. Walley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of all asbestos monitoring which has been undertaken in the Palace of Westminster and its associated outbuildings, specifying the locations and the condition of the asbestos found; if he will list by location all the remedial works currently planned or in progress, together with the timetables involved; and if, in the case of any remedial work which has been decided upon but not yet scheduled, he will give details of the condition of the asbestos and the assessment of the health hazard posed.

Mr. Chope: There are some 40 locations on the parliamentary estate where asbestos is known to exist. These are inspected annually. I will write to the hon. Member with the details she requests and place copies in the Library.

Canary Wharf

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what part or parts of the master building agreement signed by the London Docklands Development Corporation and Olympia and York, require those developers to consult any London borough council, other than the London borough of Tower Hamlets, on any aspect of their proposals.

Mr. Trippier: None.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the appropriate sum, at 1987 prices, necessary to complete each phase of the Canary wharf development in the London docklands; what proportion of such sums is likely to be invested by British institutions; and what is the appropriate distribution of the shareholdings in the scheme by nationality.

Mr. Trippier: I cannot speculate on these matters.

Ms. Gordon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the London Docklands Development Corporation to publish the master building agreement and associated agreements relating to Canary wharf.

Mr. Trippier: No.

Ms. Gordon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the agreed contribution of Olympia and York to the costs of sewage and drainage works required for the Canary wharf development.

Mr. Trippier: The developers of Canary wharf are to be responsible for works, including those for drainage, on the site and for the costs of those works.

Ms. Gordon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the amount of public money to go into the Westferry circus part of the Canary wharf project;

(2) what contribution Olympia and York are making to the construction costs of Westferry circus.

Mr. Trippier: The developers of Canary wharf will bear the full construction costs of Westferry circus.

Ms. Gordon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the price of the land for the Canary wharf project agreed by the London Docklands Development Corporation and Olympia and York.

Mr. Trippier: The land price payable to LDDC by the developers of Canary wharf is equivalent to £1 million per acre for 20 acres, of which £8 million is payable in cash and £12 million is accounted for by the developers' commitments to various on-site works. The land price is only one element of the overall package to development proposals which includes the developers' £67 million contribution to the cost of LRT's City extension of the docklands light railway.

Ms. Gordon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether any reassessment of the price for the land in the master building agreement for Canary wharf has taken place since the first draft agreement was prepared in 1986 up to the present day;

(2) what was the date at which an independent valuation was made for the Canary wharf development.

Mr. Trippier: The Department kept the terms of the whole agreement, including the land price, under review throughout the negotiations and the land price was also considered in an independent assessment of the whole agreement in April 1987.

South-West Water Authority

Mr. Matthew Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will allow the South-West water authority external borrowing powers prior to the privatisation of water authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has no plans to change water authorities' borrowing powers prior to privatisation.

Land Prices (Isle of Dogs)

Ms. Gordon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information as to the range of prices per acre of land for offices in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone.

Mr. Trippier: Prices range between £1 million and £2 million per acre, depending on the circumstances.

Nuclear Reactors (France)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times, and on what dates, problems at French nuclear reactors have been reported to Her Majesty's Government under the bilateral agreement; and what action followed.

Mr. Moynihan: No problems have been reported to Her Majesty's Government under the bilateral agreement.

Enterprise Zone (Isle of Dogs)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, for each financial year of its existence, what are the sums he has transferred to the London borough of Tower Hamlets in respect of the value of rate income forgone in respect of those parts of the enterprise zone in that borough; and what is his estimate of the likely sums to be paid in each of the years before the termination of the arrangements.

Mr. Trippier: The following amounts have been paid to the London borough of Tower Hamlets in respect of rate revenue forgone in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone:

Financial year	Amount
1982-83	1,144,672
1983-84	1,386,381
1984-85	2,232,004
1985-86	2,177,419
1986-87	[1]2,833,554

[1] Subject to audit.

The borough has also been paid £2,475,000 in the present financial year so far. The amount paid in each year is affected both by the amount of demolition and new development that takes place and by the level of the rate set by the borough. It is therefore, not possible to estimate what amounts are likely to be paid in future years.

Jonathan Swift House

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce a decision on the request for the listing of Jonathan Swift's former house at Prospect, Whitehaven.

Mr. Ridley: The Jonathan Swift house was listed as a building of special architectural or historic interest on 21 July.

Rates

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the overall percentage change in the non-domestic rate poundage in each rating authority in England between 1981-82 and 1987-88, showing the percentage increase which would have occurred in each if the non-domestic rate poundage had increased in line with the retail price index over this period and the difference between the two percentages for each authority.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed the available information in the Library.

Environment Council

Mr. Robert G. Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 21 July.

Mr. Moynihan: My noble Friend, the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Water represented the United Kingdom at this meeting.

My noble Friend was pleased to report that the Council reached a common position by a qualified majority on two draft directives on vehicle emissions: emissions from cars, known as the "Luxembourg package", and gaseous emissions from heavy vehicles. In accordance with the new co-operation procedure introduced by the Single European Act, the draft directives will now be referred to the European Parliament for its opinion. My noble Friend voiced the United Kingdom's concern that the use of article 100A as the legal base for these two measures should not prejudice the use of article 130S in the new environment chapter of the EEC treaty the legal base for measures whose predominant objective is the protection and improvement of the environment. This view was supported by all member states and the Commission.

One element of the "Luxembourg package" is that it enables member states to specify dates by which new cars must be able to run on unleaded petrol. Once the directive is adopted, we shall apply such in the United Kingdom at the earliest possible date. The Council also adopted under Article 130S a directive permitting member states to ban the sale of leaded regular petrol.

Provisional agreement was reached by a majority of member states, including the United Kingdom, on a compromise package for particula standards no diesel cars. Limits will be introduced in two stages, with tighter limits applying initially only to new engine types.

On chlorofluorocarbons the Council took note of a report by the Commission on progress towards a protocol to the ozone layer convention. Particular tribute was paid to the co-operation between the Commission and the three member states (United Kingdom, Belgium and Denmark) which have held the Presidency during the negotiations. Considerable optimism was expressed that outstanding points of difference would be resolved at the diplomatic conference to be held in Montreal in September.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the implications of the resolution of the recent meeting of the Paris Commission on the Prevention of Marine Pollution on the reduction and control of radioactive discharges into the marine environment.

Mr. Moynihan: This meeting did not pass a resolution on this topic. There was majority support for a recommendation on the minimisation and elimination of pollution caused by radioactive discharges but the United Kingdom and France entered reservations on it.

Water Charges

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what basis will be adopted for water charges when domestic rates are abolished.

Mr. Moynihan: This is under discussion with the water industry.

Block Grant (Isle of Wight)

Mr. Barry Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Association of County Councils seeking the removal of the effects of 1987-88 block grant safety nets and gain caps; and what estimate he has made of the effects of implementation to these proposals on the Isle of Wight county council.

Mr. Chope: There are no proposals to remove the nets and caps on block grant entitlements for 1987-88, and no representations have been received from the Association of County Councils on this subject since the settlement.

My right hon. Friend has today announced his proposals for local authority current provision and aggregate exchequer grant for 1988-89. The local authority associations will be consulted formally about his proposals for the settlement, including options for block grant distribution, and safety nets and caps, later in the autumn. Illustrative grant entitlements for individual authorities cannot yet be calculated.

Cash Limits

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. The non-voted cash limit in 1987-88 for new towns (DOE/NTI) has been reduced by £50 million from minus £95·146 million to minus £145·146 million to take account of receipts from disposals of property which are higher than forecast. The non-voted cash limit in 1987-88 for the urban block (DOE/UAI) is being increased by £31 million. This increase is in addition to the £3·1 million increase to the cash limit under the end-year flexibility increases announced today by my right hon. Friend, the Chief Secretary. The revised cash limit, taking account of both changes, is £437·5 million. The balance of £19 million will be surrendered to the reserve.

Charities (Grants)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make orders under section 49 of the Local Government Act 1985 requiring residuary bodies to make grants to eligible charities within their areas from money received from the sale of land belonging to the former Greater London council or metropolitan councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: An order was made under section 49 of the Local Government Act 1985 on 2 February (SI 118/87) to require the London residuary body to pay £10 million to the Trust for London in the financial year 1986/87.

My right hon. Friend has given careful consideration to all representations made to him about the possibility of other section 49 orders to make grants to charities in London and in the former metropolitan counties. No further section 49 orders are planned. Instead receipts that might have been used for this purpose will be distributed to the relevant boroughs and district councils. These councils are in the best position to decide on the appropriate level of support for their local voluntary sector.

Royal Arsenal Gatehouse

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what reply he gave to applications by the London borough of Greenwich dated 30 July 1986 and 9 April 1987 for a special capital allocation to enable the council to restore the royal arsenal gatehouse.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what reply he gave to a letter dated 21 July 1986 from the director of architectural services of the London borough of Greenwich seeking a special capital allocation to enable the council to restore the royal arsenal gatehouse on land surplus to the A206 road improvement scheme.

Mr. Chope: The London borough of Greenwich was informed that a special capital allocation was not available. The council has discretion in deciding how to spend the resources which it has available for capital expenditure and it is for the council to decide whether to allocate a share of those resources to the restoration of the royal arsenal gatehouse.

THE ARTS

"Nightmare on Elm Street III"

Mr. Summerson asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received concerning the film "Nightmare on Elm Street III"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have had no representations about this film. I do not have ministerial responsibility for the content of commercially-produced films.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Minister for the Arts what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Luce Since the creation of the Office of Arts and Libraries as a separate Department in 1983 the numbers have been as follows:

	1984		1985		1986		1987
	Women	Men	Women	Men	Women	Men	Women	Men

DEFENCE

Security Forces

24. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel are currently serving in the security forces in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Freeman: As at 31 March 1987 (the most recent available figure) 17,694 service men and women are serving in the security forces in Northern Ireland.

Woolwich Arsenal (Reprographic Unit)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many tenders he has received from contractors for the on-site operation of the reprographic unit of the directorate general of defence quality assurance at Woolwich arsenal;

(2) what estimate he has made as to how many jobs are likely to be lost if the reprographic unit of the directorate general of defence quality assurance is transferred to private contractors; and what are the estimated annual savings;

(3) what discussion he has reached on the possible contractorisation of the reprographic unit of the directorate general of defence quality assurance.

Mr. Sainsbury: The tenders for the on-site operation of the reprographic unit of the directorate general of defence quality assurance at Woolwich arsenal are in the course of preparation. It is not therefore possible at this stage to say whether the task will be contractorised, whether jobs would be lost or what savings might be effected.

Departmental Manpower

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade of his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Hifix 6 Radio Transmitters

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the locations of all HI/FIX 6 radio transmitters now operating or under construction.

(2) what types of vessel are equipped to make use of the HI/FIX 6 radio transmitter's signals;

(3) if he will list all the purposes that the HI/FIX 6 radio transmitter is intended to serve;

(4) if he will state the total expenditure on the HI/FIX 6 system; and if he will list vessels adapted to make use of the HI/FIX system;

(5) why the HI/FIX 6 radio system was built.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Hifix 6 is a radio navigation aid providing precise navigational data to RN ships operating in coastal waters. The system is fitted to all Hunt, River and Ton class mine-countermeasures vessels and to all ocean going and coastal survey vessels. Total expenditure on setting up the Hifix 6 systems, including development, production, spares and works costs, was about £10 million at 1983 prices. In addition, there is a small running maintenance contract. The location of Hifix 6 radio transmitters is classified.

Fylingdales (Radar System)

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Defence when work on the large phased array radar at Fylingdales will be completed.

Mr. Freeman: We hope that the modernisation of the ballistic missile early warning system at RAF Fylingdales will be completed by the early 1990s.

Trident

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total cost to the United Kingdom of United States technical assistance with the United Kingdom development of the ELS communication system for Trident.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence has been considering the potential of extra low frequency communications as a means of improving the effectiveness of Royal Navy submarines, generally by allowing them to operate at greater depth and speed while receiving communications. This involves an evaluation of the practical characteristics of an ELF system through a trial installation, for which purpose technical assistance from a United States company has been provided under normal commercial contract procedures. The details of this are subject to commercial confidentiality and cannot be disclosed.

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total cost to the United Kingdom of United States technical assistance with the development of United Kingdom warheads for Trident.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to reveal information of this nature.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Denzil Davies asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many times United States Air Force B-52s equipped with either internal or external air-launched cruise missiles have exercised in the United Kingdom since 1 January 1986.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave yesterday to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock).

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether United States ships carrying nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles have visited British ports.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In accordance with long-standing policy, neither the United States Government nor the British Government confirm or deny the presence of nuclear weapons on visiting warships.

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether air-launched cruise missiles will be deployed in Britain as part of the Reforger 87 exercises.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1987]: The position remains as stated by my right hon. Friend, the hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley) in his answers to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 18 June 1984 at column 41; 26 July 1984 at columns 751-52; and 15 November 1985 at column 309.

Overseas Military Training Assistance

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list those countries (a) which currently receive military training assistance and (b) whose applications for such assistance are currently being considered.

Mr. Freeman: I shall answer shortly.

Furniture Removals

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Defence what new arrangments his Department has made or intends to make for the allocation of contracts for furniture removals for Army families; and if he is satisfied that there has been adequate consultation with the firms which have previously carried out this work.

Mr. Freeman: Until recently the great majority of service removals have been arranged using the "three tender system", under which the service man himself obtained three quotations and the Department refunded to him the amount of the lowest tender. This system has, however, been criticised in the past as being potentially open to abuse, and as placing an undue burden on public funds.

Following a review and the experience of suitable trials, it was recently decided that, save in exceptional circumstances, all removals for Army personnel should be conducted under centrally placed contract arrangements. Contracts have been introduced progressively throughout the country for all Army removals, and the other two services will be adopting similar procedures shortly.

The removal industry has been aware of these developments and several meetings have been held with the British Association of Removers. Any removal company interested in this work can apply to tender as contracts are let or renewed, although it may be necessary to restrict the number of companies actually invited to tender in any particular round.

European Defence Initiative

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has had any recent discussions with his European North Atlantic Treaty Organisation counterparts on technical developments and the security implications of the European defence initiative.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is no "European Defence initiative" as such. The subject of possible improvements to NATO's air defences in Europe has, however, been discussed on a number of occasions by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence with his NATO counterparts, both European and North American. Details of these discussions are, of course, confidential.

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what communications he has had with the President of the European Commission, Mr. Delors, on proposals by the European Community to develop an integrated European defence industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Lance Missile Warheads (Replacement)

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any current North Atlantic Treaty Organisation plans to replace Lance missile warheads with more modern nuclear warheads.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on 24 March at column 162.

Eight-inch Nuclear Artillery

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether a decision will be taken on the modernisation of the Army's 8-in nuclear artillery before November.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to my hon. Friend the Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith).

2nd Infantry Division

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by (a) home base and (b) current postings the units which comprise the 2nd Infantry Division of the Army.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested by the hon. Member is classified.

Lance Missile

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what nuclear warheads for Lance have been deployed by the United States in support of the British Army of the Rhine since 1981.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall answer as soon as possible.

United States Units

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the United States units which temporarily will be based in each constituency in 1987;

(2) if he will list the constituencies in which United States units exercising from the United States in 1987 will be based.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not the practice to give detailed information of this kind.

Short-range Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the effect of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Montebello agreement of October 1983 on the number of short-range nuclear systems being deployed in Europe.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The number of short-range nuclear systems deployed by NATO in Europe is published annually in annex A to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates". Following implementation of the reductions agreed by Ministers at Montebello in 1983, NATO's stockpile of nuclear warheads in Europe is at its lowest level for over 20 years.

Radium 223

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the source of the radium 223 used in training exercises.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence what quantity of radium 223 sulphate, diluted with barium sulphate and aluminium oxide, is typically used in military training exercises simulating nuclear accidents.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall answer as soon as possible.

Military Exercises (Radioactive Contamination)

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much radioactive material by weight has been removed (a) from the Swynnerton training camp in each of the last seven years and (b) from each exercise involved in Exercise Senator;

(2) where, and by what method of transportation, radioactive material is disposed of following Exercise Senator.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department takes to protect (a) service men, (b) civilians and (c) livestock from land contaminated by radioactivity as a result of training exercises simulating nuclear accidents.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our practice to discuss details of nuclear accident response exercises. However, steps are taken after a nuclear accident exercise involving the use of radioactive materials to ensure that neither MOD personnel, civilians nor livestock are exposed to radiation, by the thorough clearing-up of contaminated material. This is subsequently isolated for a period of a few months to allow it to decay to minute levels of radioactivity. The means of disposal are fully in accordance with the requirements of civil authorising departments.

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer on 15 July, Official Report, columns 1129-35, what method was used to spray radioactive contaminants during the tests referred to.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any exercise at the Swynnerton training camp in January 1981 (a) involved radioactive contaminants and (b) were part of Exercise Senator.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our practice to discuss details of particular exercises.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information was given to police and other personnel active in Swynnerton, Staffordshire, as to the extent to which they were exposed to radioactive materials as a result of military exercises.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what have been the recent effects of radioactive materials on people in Swynnerton, Staffordshire, arising from military training exercises.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply of 20 July to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) at column. 97.

Training Exercises (Radioactive Materials)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will clarify what is meant by a clear training advantage in the use of radioactive materials during military training exercises simulating nuclear accidents.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In order to maintain an effective nuclear accident response organisation, capable of dealing with the consequences of an accident involving defence nuclear material, personnel have to be trained in the use of detection equipment, in decontamination techniques, and in safe operating procedures in contaminated areas. Most of this training can be undertaken without the use of radioactive material. However, it is necessary to ensure that such training is effective by giving appropriate personnel some experience of working with the low levels of radioactivity required to achieve relevant instrument readings. Such training is only carried out under safe, controlled conditions, and the material involved is of concentrations that do not pose a hazard either to the participants or to the general public.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of military training exercises simulating nuclear accidents and involving the use of radioactive materials which his Department has undertaken in each year since 1979 inclusive.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our practice to give details of nuclear accident response exercises.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will itemise the protective clothing worn by service men when participating in military training exercises simulating nuclear accidents.

Mr. Ian Stewart: All personnel permitted access to contaminated areas in such exercises are required to wear protective clothing appropriate to the levels of contamination assumed for exercise purposes including respiratory protection. Such clothing also includes items such as coveralls, gloves and boots.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what procedures his Department has for monitoring the long-term effects on the health of those personnel who participate in training exercises involving the use of radioactive materials;

(2) if his Department has any plans to review (a) the use of radioactive materials in training exercises simulating nuclear accidents, (b) the procedures for monitoring the effects on those involved and (c) the procedures for informing other authorities of such exercises;

(3) which authorities his Department informs when training exercises dealing with nuclear accidents take place; at what stage each of these authorities is informed; and at which level, within each authority, the information is made available.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) of 20 July at columns 95-96; and that to the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) of 20 July at column 94. I see no need to review procedures in this area.

Operation Senator (Radioactive Material)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list all the chemicals in the radioactive material used by his Department in Operation Senator in 1981.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall answer as soon as possible.

Nuclear Weapons Storage Sites

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether British emergency services have any right of access to United States nuclear weapons storage sites in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There is full liaison with the local emergency services, particularly the fire service, at all RAF Stations in the United Kingdom where any explosive material may be stored, including those from which United States forces operate.

Iran-Iraq War (Equipment and Sales)

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of non-lethal defence equipment sold by the United Kingdom to Iran and Iraq in each year since the outbreak of the war between these two countries.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the consistent policy of successive Administrations not to give the details of defence sales business with other countries. As is well known in the case of Iraq and Iran, Her Majesty's Government have strictly adhered to the policy guidelines for defence sales as set out in the answer given on 29

October 1985 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in reply to a question from the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel).

Atomic Tests (Ex-Service Men)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Defence how the validity of the study of ex-service men by the National Radiological Protection Board is affected by the discovery that not all names recorded in the operational record books are of personnel present during the atomic tests; and if he will make a statement showing the numbers affected.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information MOD has provided for the study on potential participants included access to the operational record books. Since the criteria for inclusion in the study were set by NRPB, questions on its validity should be directed to them.

Royal Navy Armaments Depot, Beith

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply of 15 July, Official Report, column 496, he will define the safeguarded zone surrounding the Royal Navy armaments depot, Beith; when it was established and when it was last reviewed; if he will list the commercial premises within the safeguarded zone in respect of which his Department has not exercised its rights of veto; and if he will list all other proposed developments within this zone which his Department has proscribed.

Mr. Freeman: The safeguarding zone surrounding RNAD Beith is defined using standard criteria produced by the Health and Safety Executive. These criteria correlate to international regulations and prescribe the safety distances for specific quantities of stored ammunition. The current safeguarding zone is defined on the safeguarding map issued by the Scottish Development Department on 21 December 1967 to the local planning authority, now Cunninghame district council. The safeguarding zone was formally established in 1964. It is regularly checked in relation to the amount of explosives stored but no alteration to the map has been necessary since it was issued in 1967. The commercial premises within the safeguarding zone in respect of which my Department has not invoked its statutory right to object are:

1. Fertiliser compound, Barrmill thread mills.
2. Agriculture store, Shotts cottage, Beith.
3. Erection of cubicle housing unit, Bankhead farm.
4. Cow cubicle unit at Roughwood, Beith.
5. Cubicle housing unit for cows, South Barr farm, Beith.
6. Garage (for storage) at Beith road, Barrmill.

Proposed developments within the safeguarding zone to which my Department has objected:

1. Caravan site at Brighouse.
2. Dwellinghouse at Windyhouse farm, Beith.
3. House at Drumble farm, Beith.
4. Blue Circle Cement works, Barrmill.
5. Conversion of Byre into a dwellinghouse at West Middlebank, farm, Dalry.
6. Mac Mix Ltd., ready mixed concrete depot in old quarry area, Barrmill.
7. Conversion of outbuilding to dwellinghouse at Meikle Barcosh, Dalry road, Beith.
8. Giffen estate, Dalry erection of stables and use as a horseriding complex.
9. Conversion of stables into public house at The Coach House, Giffen estate.

Cash Limits

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes to make any changes to the current cash limits for 1987-88.

Mr. Younger: My right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury announced today an increase to the cash limit for class I, Vote 2 of £350,815,000 under the end-year flexibility scheme for central Government expenditure. I can now announce that the cash limit for that vote will be increased by a further £250,245,000, from £8,902,652,000 to £9,152,897,000. Of this new increase, £210,000,000 comes under the terms of the additional flexibility arrangements I announced to the House on 19 December 1986 -at column 778, and which is a direct result of underspending last year arising from procurement decisions taken to improve contractors' performance and the value for money obtained from our defence procurement contracts during the 1986-87 financial year, including the Department's new and tauter approach to interim payments. The remaining amount, £40,245,000, represents the return to my Department's cash block of £40,000,000 which had been set aside for the external financing requirement of Royal Ordnance plc. (as described in the introduction to class I Supply Estimates 1986-87, HC284-I), but which was not in the event needed for this purpose; together with £245,000 in respect of the transfer of responsibility for the review board for Government contracts from Her Majesty's Treasury to the Ministry of Defence. These sums will be met from within the reserve and will therefore not add to the public expenditure planning total.

Battlefield Nuclear Weapons Systems

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on battlefield nuclear weapons systems in service with United Kingdom forces in the British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. Younger: Following SACEUR's proposals to NPG Ministers in 1985 for the reduction of NATO's nuclear stockpile in Europe, My Department undertook a review of United Kingdom-operated battlefield nuclear weapon systems in BAOR. As a result, it has been decided, with SACEUR's approval, to rationalise these over the next 12 months. This will involve, inter alia, the United Kingdom's complete withdrawal from the 8 in. nuclear artillery role in order to concentrate resources on the 155 mm dual-capable gun already in service. These changes will complete the actions placed on the United Kingdom by SACEUR as part of the first phase of his proposals to implement the 1983 Montebello decision to reduce the nuclear stockpile and improve its effectiveness.

No decisions on modernisation as it affects British forces have yet been taken. A report on this aspect will be made to the House when the appropriate moment comes.

The measures which will be introduced will lead to an overall reduction in the United Kingdom-assigned nuclear warhead stocks in Europe, including the associated logistic elements, and will produce savings in manpower and other resources totalling some £55 million over the next 10 years.

Coach House, Giffen

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now reconsider his decision to veto the creation of licensed premises at the Old Coach House, Giffen estate, by Dalry.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 15 July, 1987, c. 496]: No.

Destroyers and Frigates

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to announce the results of the tenders for the single role minehunter order.

Mr. Sainsbury [pursuant to his reply, 14 July 1987, c. 440]: I am happy to announce today that, following a competition, a contract is to be placed with Vosper Thornycroft (UK) Ltd. for the build of four single role minehunters. The competition was keen, but a batch order for four vessels placed at VT provided best value for money for the MOD.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Staff

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will give the numbers of staff of hon. Members that are accommodated in parliamentary buildings and the costs involved under relevant headings for 1970-71, 1975-76, 1980-81 and the latest available financial year.

Mr. Wakeham: The information is as follows:

	Number
1970-71	199
1975-76	304
1980-81	364
1986-87	422

It is not possible to separate the costs of providing this accommodation from the overall costs involved.

Publications (Clerks' Contributions)

Mr. Cryer asked the hon. Member representing the House of Commons Commission if he will state the criteria which govern contributions by House of Commons Clerks to outside publishing concerns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: It has always been regarded as acceptable for Clerks of the House of Commons to contribute factual, descriptive and analytical material on parliamentary matters to academic, educational or other serious publications. Approval is sought from the Clerk of the House in any case of doubt. The Commission has never considered it necessary to lay down guidelines on this matter.

WALES

Land Authority for Wales

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of the Land Authority for Wales.

Mr. Grist: I expect to receive shortly the report of a comprehensive financial management and policy review of the Land Authority for Wales. I shall be giving careful consideration to the future of the authority and its role in the light of the findings of the review.

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied that developers are not making disproportionate profits from the activities of the Land Authority for Wales.

Mr. Grist: Disposals of land by the Land Authority for Wales are invariably at full market value. There can thus be no question of the land authority subsidising developers' profits.

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the land holdings of the Land Authority for Wales and the purpose involved where that land is held for a purpose not in accord with the planning use of the relevant local council.

Mr. Grist: I have asked the chairman of the Land Authority for Wales to write to my hon. Friend.

Pupils (Capitation Allowance)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by each county the capitation allowance for pupils in (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools in each of the past 10 years; and what each of the above figures represents as a percentage of the councils' total incomes in each year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not available in the form requested.

NHS (Per Capita Expenditure)

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the National Health Service per capita expenditure for each of the health regions in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is as follows:

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: I will write to the hon. Lady as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Special Advisers

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the benefits he anticipates will accrue to Wales as a result of the appointment of hon. Members as his special advisers;

(2) to what departmental papers and with what degree of classification those hon. Members recently appointed as his special advisers will have access;

(3) what is his estimate of the additional cost to public funds of the servicing by his Department of those hon. Members recently appointed as his special advisers;

(4) what is his estimate of the additional civil servants' time per annum which will be involved in servicing those hon. Members recently appointed as his special advisers.

Mr. Peter Walker: I look forward to considerable benefit arising from my having access to the experience, knowledge and interest of my hon. Friends in their particular fields of interest.

They will have access to papers under the normal rules governing all hon. Members' access to Government documents and I anticipate no extra staff time or public funds being required

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent by local authorities on (a) school transport and (b) school meals in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the comparable figures for each year since 1978-79 in cash terms and real terms using 1986-87 prices and using an index of 100 for 1978-79.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Housing

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 17 July, he will list those planning permissions granted for residential housing developments on appeal in each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by Welsh district, the number of homes considered to be unfit for human habitation as a percentage of the total housing stock in each district.

Mr. Grist: Reliable estimates of the number of dwellings considered to be unfit in each local authority district will not be available until the publication of the 1986 Welsh house condition survey.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the years 1985 and 1986 the estimated percentages of women delivering in Wales (a) whose labours were induced, (b) whose labours were of spontaneous onset, and (c) who had elected caesarean sections.

Water Pollution

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many incidents of water pollution by farm wastes were recorded in each of the years 1980 to 1986, and in 1987 to date, in Wales; how many of these incidents were attributable to poilution by silage effluent, and by slurry; and how many of these incidents were the subject of warning letters and prosecutions.

Mr. Grist: The number of incidents of water pollution by agricultural waste recorded in 1984, 1985 and 1986 were 327, 464 and 404, respectively. Figures for 1987 are not yet available. Detailed information of the incidents and prosecutions, and figures for the previous years, are not held centrally, but may be obtained from the Welsh water authority.

Conservation

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements have been made, in accordance with the requirements of section 18(8) of the Agriculture Act 1986, to monitor the effect on wildlife and the landscape of agreements concluded with farmers in the Cambrian mountains environmentally sensitive area; whether he will make details of these arrangements available in the Library; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The monitoring arrangements of the Cambrian mountains ESA include aerial photography, ground surveys of vegetation and hay meadows and the evaluation of woodland. Discussions with the Nature Conservancy Council are being held on ways for monitoring the effect upon wildlife in the area. Details of the arrangements will shortly be made available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) in respect of land within environmentally sensitive areas, how many farmers have applied to enter into management agreements in each of these areas, and what is the total area of land involved; and how many agreements have so far been concluded with farmers in each of these areas, and what is the total area of land involved;

(2) if he will give the extent in hectares of the Cambrian mountains environmentally sensitive area, the total area of agricultural land within the environmentally sensitive area, and an estimate of the number of farmers eligible to enter into management agreements in that area.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total area of land which was referred to the Welsh Office Agriculture Department by the Forestry Commission under the forestry grant consultation procedures for each of the years ended 31 March 1986 and 31 March 1987; and if he will list in the Official Report in respect of each of the area offices of his Department the area of land which it advised was (a) acceptable to award forestry grant and (b) inappropriate to afforest on agricultural grounds.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall reply as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Offshore Supplies

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that when there is an upturn in the market for offshore production and exploration rigs, the GIE Clydebank yard is still in existence to take advantage of the increased demand for its products.

Mr. Lang: Bouygues Offshore, the parent company of UIE, has already announced that it intends to keep the yard open, if necessary on a care-and-maintenance basis, and to concentrate its United Kingdom activities at Clydebank, so that UIE is in a position to continue to compete for work and to benefit when offshore activity recovers. My Department will be offering any assistance it can to UIE in its efforts to secure new orders.

Out-patients

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of out-patient attendances both new and old for each surgical specialty in each hospital in Scotland for 1985.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested, which relates to 30 September 1985, is set out in the table. The appropriate surgical specialty codes are as follows:

Prevention of Terrorism

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons have been detained in Scotland under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act on a yearly basis at the latest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: These figures are given in table 3 of Home Office "Statistical Bulletin" No. 11/87, which is available in the Library.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many persons have been charged in Scotland under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act; and how many have been found guilty;

(2) how many persons have been convicted in Scotland under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act on a yearly basis at the latest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information available is set out in the table. In terms of Scottish statistics, "persons with charge proved" is equivalent to "persons found guilty". Information on the number charged and the number convicted could not be provided without disproportionate cost. However, any difference between the number of persons with charge proved and the number convicted is likely to be minimal.

It should be noted that, quite separately from offences under the Prevention of Terrorism legislation, persons detained under that legislation may be charged with common law offences or offences under other legislation.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: The table contains the information requested for non-industrial grades as at 1 January of each year. Comparable figures for industrial grades are not available.

Granton Foreshore (Contamination)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received recent representations about the contamination of Granton foreshore; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have received three representations since the beginning of this year. Edinburgh district council and the Forth river purification board, the bodies principally responsible for investigating and dealing with complaints involving pollution, are investigating the matter.

Education Costs

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent by local authorities on (a) school transport and (b) school meals in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the comparable figures for each year since 1978-79 in cash terms and real terms using 1986-87 prices and using an index of 100 for 1978-79;

(2) what is the latest figure for expenditure per pupil on books and on equipment in (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) special schools; and what are the comparable figures for each of the years since 1978-79, in cash terms and real terms using 1986-87 prices and using an index of 100 for 1978-79.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current capacity of electricity generating stations in Scotland; and by how much in each of the past four years this has exceeded demand in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the Scottish electricity boards that the current capacity of electricity generating stations in Scotland is 8,399 MW. This includes British Nuclear Fuel's reactors at Chapelcross and UKAEA's prototype fast reactor at Dounreay, but excludes any private generating capacity. Taking account of the planning margin (currently 28 per cent.), the excess capacity over maximum demand was 1,316 MW in 1983-84; 1,130 MW in 1984-85; 1,053 MW in 1985-86; and 652 MW in 1986-87.

YTS

Mrs. Ray Michie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has undertaken any assessment of the impact of the reduction in the lodging allowance for YTS trainees who are obliged to take up placements away from their home in rural areas such as Argyll and Bute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Manpower Services Commission is currently reviewing the funding of YTS including living away from home allowances. Any particular problems in certain parts of Scotland will be taken into account in the review.

Rivers (Pollution)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what complaints about pollution in rivers were made in each of the river purification board areas in each year since 1979; what prosecutions have resulted; and what action has been taken to prevent recurrences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: These matters fall within the responsibilities of the seven river purification boards whose annual reports include information of this kind. I am arranging for copies of the latest reports to be placed in the House of Commons Library and will investigate the possibility of obtaining copies for earlier years.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of unemployment in each sector in the Ayr, Girvan and Sanquhar travel-to-work areas in 1979 and 1986 respectively.

Mr. Lang: The only available information is from the 1981 to 1984 censuses of employment, and is shown in the table. The estimates for individual travel-to-work areas are subject to sampling errors, and are dependent on the level of detail supplied by the respondent. In particular, in the 1984 census it has been possible to allocate a number of teachers and other local authority employees to the travel-to-work area of their work place, whereas they were counted at the Ayr headquarters in 1981; this has been a major factor in the reduction in the recorded number of employees in services in Ayr.

Buses

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what routes and frequencies of bus services in Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley constituency were registered (a) prior to bus deregulation and (b) currently.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available centrally.

Girvan Bypass

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the result of the further consideration of the demand and need for the Girvan bypass; and if he will now authorise preliminary work to proceed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Strathclyde regional council, as agent authority for my right hon. and learned Friend, has been instructed to carry out a feasibility study in respect of a Girvan bypass. The report of the council is not expected until later this year and I would not wish to comment in advance of that.

South Ayreshire Hospital

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the contract for the south Ayrshire hospital to be awarded; what is the expected completion date for building and the date on which the hospital will be opened for patients; what the planned bed complement is in each specialism for the new hospital; and what approval he has given for the arrangements for disposal of Ayr county, Heathfield and Seafield hospitals when they are surplus to requirement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that Ayrshire and Arran health board hopes to award the contract for the replacement acute hospital in 1988 with a view to completing the building by 1990. The board is responsible for determining the opening date and the allocation of beds among specialties.

My right hon. and learned Friend has not yet been asked to approve the closure and disposal of any of the hospitals in Ayr that may become surplus to requirements when the new hospital opens.

Nursery Places

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage provision of nursery places for three and four-year-olds in each of the following wards: (a) Coylton and Kincaid, (b) Maybole, (c) North Carrick, (d) South Carrick, (e) Girvan, Ailsa, (f) Girvan, Glendown and (g) Annbank, Mossblown and St. Quinox.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available at ward level.

Selective Financial Assistance

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of applicants for selective financial assistance, the number of employees involved in each case and other non-confidential information about the applicants in each of (a) Ayr, (b) Girvan and (c) Cumnock and Sanquhar travel-to-work areas.

Mr. Lang: Information on individual applications cannot be disclosed for reasons of confidentiality. Summary information for applications for selective financial assistance in each TTWA in the period since the changes in regional policy came into effect on 29 November 1984 is set out in the table.

	Value of grant applied for (£ million)	Associated project costs (£ million)
Ayr	6·4	82·9
Girvan	1·0	5·5
Cumnock and Sanquhar	4·2	20·4

In response to these applications, grant offers of £8·7 million have been made associated with £90·6 million project costs and the creation or safeguarding of just under 2,000 jobs.

Harbours

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants, loans or other assistance from any European Community funds have been provided for the development of harbours in Scotland; what have been the criteria for submitting harbour schemes for consideration for assistance; and if he will discuss with Strathclyde regional council a scheme for the development of Girvan harbour and its submission for European assistance.

Mr. Lang: The European regional development fund provides the main source of European Community assistance for harbour-related developments in Scotland, having given grants of £38 million since 1975. The basic criterion for the submission of schemes, subject to the public expenditure framework, is compliance with the European community regulation governing the operation of the fund.

It is for Strathclyde regional council to come forward with any proposals for Girvan harbour; until then discussions would be premature.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is able to announce the designation of further environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: Three further environmentally sensitive areas will now be designated in Scotland: the Machair Lands of the Uists and Benbecula; the Whitlaw Eildon area of the Borders region and the Loch Ken River Dee valley in the Stewartry district of Dumfries and Galloway. Further consultations will be held with interested bodies in each of those areas before the designating orders are made.

New Town Development Corporations

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the arrangements for financing the industrial and commercial activities of new town development corporations in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: As part of one of the series of financial management surveys of non-departmental public bodies, the Government have recently been reviewing the arrangements for financing Scottish new towns expenditure. We have concluded that it is unlikely that Cumbernauld, Glenrothes, Irvine and Livingston development corporations will generate surpluses in future on a sufficient scale to enable them to repay borrowing taken out to cover past deficits or to reimburse the Government grants paid to meet the interest charges on loans taken out to finance general revenue deficits.

We therefore propose to take steps at the earliest opportunity to put the funding of corporations' non-housing activities on a more stable and realistic basis. The aim of the new arrangements will be to enable corporations to continue during the remaining period of their lives to perform their essential functions of promoting economic development in Scotland in an efficient and cost-effective way. My Department will shortly commence discussions with development corporations about the precise form of the new arrangements. It is, however, clear that, to pave the way for the new arrangements, it will be necessary to seek statutory powers to write off part of corporations' existing debt. The Government will introduce the necessary legislation as soon as practicable.

In the meantime, corporations will continue to have access to the national loans fund to cover revenue deficits and the Government will continue to make grants available to cover the interest charges on such borrowing.

Dounreay

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what report he has received from the Campaign Against Dounreay Expansion on the radioactivity levels in the vicinity of Dounreay, based upon the findings of a study conducted by Dr. Robert Wheaton; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No report of this nature has been received from the Campaign Against Dounreay Expansion. My right hon. and learned Friend is, however, aware of Dr. Wheaton's findings and is satisfied that they are consistent with the results obtained from the official environmental monitoring surveys around Dounreay. The results, which are contained in Scottish Department "Statistical Bulletin" No. 1(E)1987, confirm that the levels of radioactivity are equivalent, in terms of doses to people, to a very small fraction of the internationally agreed limits for members of the public.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage share of National Health Service costs allocated to the Scottish ambulance service; and how this compares with percentage expenditure in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1987]: In 1985-86, the latest year for which comparative figures are available, the Scottish ambulance service received 1·24 per cent. of total expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland by comparison with 1·85 per cent. in England and 2·16 per cent. in Wales.

In the current financial year, the Scottish ambulance service will receive an estimated 1·35 per cent. of total expenditure.

Health Boards

Mr. Harry Ewing asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the amount paid to each general manager and unit managers in Scotland's health boards arising from savings made in each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No such payments have been made.

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each member of every health board in Scotland, and the source of their nomination.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply, 13 July 1987, col. 398]: The information requested is as follows. Where and individual was the source of the nomination, his style and description is given as at the time of nomination.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax Evasion

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total loss of tax revenue through evasion and or fraudulent returns in relation to payment of (i) income tax, (ii) national insurance contributions, (iii) corporation tax, (iv) capital transfer tax and (v) value added tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that reliable estimates are not possible.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Sackville asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the Inland Revenue's plan to move work out of London.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Department has considered a number of proposals to reduce resignations of inspectors of taxes. One of the major reasons for resignations which it has identified is the generally unwelcome nature of a transfer to London. It has therefore decided to move from London to a number of cities elsewhere, over the period 1987 to 1991, 21 tax districts dealing with some of the largest commercial and industrial concerns; some head office sections responsible for training and technical and investigation work including half of the London special office and inquiry branch posts. A total of about 185 posts at higher levels and about 125 at lower levels will be involved. Suitable accommodation is being sought in Glasgow, Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, Birmingham and Bristol. The Department will ensure that any inconvenience to companies and their advisers will be kept to a minimum. I recognise and accept the reasons underlying these proposals and I support the plans and hope that they will succeed in their aim.

Property Services Agency

Dr. Twinn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any changes are proposed in the financial and accounting responsibilities of the Property Services Agency and client departments for new civil works projects.

Mr. Major: Under existing arrangements client Departments are responsible for defining their accommodation needs precisely, economically and in good time. PSA is responsible for deciding how best to meet these requirements—whether by using existing property, or by leasing or new construction. Where new construction is the agreed solution the capital cost of such projects (and the cost of the design resources associated with them) is generally met from the client Department's public expenditure programme. But, with a few exceptions, expenditure on civil projects still falls on the PSA's vote (Class XX. 19). Most Departments are required to use PSA exclusively to provide accommodation services.

From 1 April 1988 Departments will be required to meet, directly from their votes, the cost of major civil building projects which are funded from their public expenditure programmes. This will bring the treatment of such expenditure in the public expenditure survey and in estimates into line. From the same date Departments will be able to test the market, and to use agents other than the PSA for design and project management of new construction where it appears cost effective and in the interests of good management to do so. These arrangements will apply to projects estimated to cost £150,000 or more. The property repayment services arrangements will continue to govern the provision of leased accommodation, minor works and maintenance.

These changes are part of a continuing process which is designed to clarify the respective responsibilities of client and agent to ensure completion of projects to time and within budget. The introduction of payment will improve the incentive for the client Department to ensure, for example, that late and potentially expensive changes to specification are avoided. The introduction of competition, by untying Departments from PSA, will provide an opportunity for Departments to test other sources of supply as well as an incentive for further improvement of the efficiency of services provided by PSA.

Under the new payment arrangements Departments will remain accountable for the requirement; PSA will remain accountable for the services which it provides. Departments will not be required to second-guess PSA's professional judgments. But the change in vote responsibilities will enable client Departments to discharge their role more effectively.

Under untying, Departments will not necessarily be expected to test the market from the outset or to use agents other than the PSA. The process is expected to be evolutionary for three reasons.

First, it will take time for Departments to acquire the necessary resources and skills; for some Departments, especially small Departments, or those with few building projects, it may not be economical for them to do so.

Secondly, Departments will need to satisfy the Treasury of their capacity to use alternative agencies.

Thirdly, it will be necessary to take into account the effects of changes in workload on PSA. Departments will therefore be expected to agree an advance programme of work with PSA.

PSA intends to move to a system of commercial accounting as soon as possible. When it does, PSA will be able to provide advance quotations on a comparable basis to those of outside agencies. In the interim it will be necessary for Departments to base their comparisons on the best estimates PSA can provide.

These arrangements will be reviewed in two years' time.

The Government will take account of this reply in their response to the Select Committee on the Environment, whose report earlier this year on PSA recommended charging on a repayment basis and untying of Departments for some of the functions carried out by PSA.

Cash Limits

Mr. Marland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give revised cash limits for 1987-88 resulting from the carry-forward of capital underspends allowed under the end-year flexibility scheme for central Government and for local authority expenditure.

Mr. Major: A list of revised cash limits totalling £458·1 million is shown in the following table. The increases in cash limits on central Government votes are subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplement Estimates.

The total increase classified as public expenditure is £456·9 million. This sum will be met from the reserve and will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

(2) Capital expenditure on this vote is not classified as public expenditure.

(3) This vote is a token one; carryforward will be taken in the form of increased appropriations-in-aid of £97,000.

Investment Trust

Mr. Chapman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to seek to amend the definition of an investment trust; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Under the Finance Bill the whole of section 93 of the Finance Act 1972 would be repealed. Most of the section is concerned with the arrangements which were introduced to secure a 30 per cent. rate on the capital gains of companies. These arrangements would be overtaken by the changes in the Bill for companies' capital gains, and therefore need to be repealed. Section 93(6), however, relates to the circumstances in which an investment trust can be approved under section 359 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act and hence qualify for tax exemption on its capital gains. The need for subsection (6) will remain. In the time available it has not been possible to correct the repeal schedule in the Finance Bill, but we shall be introducing in next year's Bill a provision to preserve subsection (6). This provision will be effective from 17 March 1987, the date from which the repeal of section 93 has effect under the Bill.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Mullin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the North sea oil revenue received by the Treasury for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lilley: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Corporations (Pre-privatisation Revenue)

Mr. Mullin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the revenue received by the Treasury from each privatised corporation for each of the last three years before privatisation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information available from published reports and accounts on the tax payments, net repayments of Government loans, interest payments on Government loans and public dividend capital dividends is as follows.

The figures do not show flows from central Government to the industries, for example, grants and net new borrowings, nor the receipts realised from privatisation. Nor do they represent the public expenditure of the corporations which would include, in addition to these flows, any market and overseas borrowings and leases. Definitions and information on the public expenditure of the industries can be found in the annual public expenditure White Papers, published by HMSO.

[1] Tax paid is the cash paid in the financial year and not the liability for tax in that year.
[2] These figures represent tax paid in the 12 months to the December of the financial year and not in the financial year itself eg. Rolls Royce figure of £5·0 million in 1984-85 represents tax paid in calendar year 1984. Other corporations have accounting year-ends on 31 March.
[3] Net loan repayments represents the gross borrowing from the National Loan Fund less gross repayments.
[4] No separate figures available. Jaguar was part of BLMC Ltd.
[5] Royalty payments by Britoil and Enterprise Oil, and VAT and PAYE payments are not included since they are not publicly available by individual corporation before privatisation.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had concerning the levying of value added tax on pet foods; if he intends to seek to categorise pet foods in the same way as other foods for value added purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have received a few letters, including one from the Pet Food Manufacturers Association. The Government have no plans to relieve those items of pet food which are currently liable to VAT at the standard rate.

War Pensions

Mr. Corbett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost of disregarding for tax purposes war pensions received by (a) those under 65 years and (b) those over 65 years; and what estimate he has made of the numbers in each category.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Payroll Giving Schemes

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many agencies have been approved by the Inland Revenue for the purpose of changing payroll giving schemes up to 30 June; and how many schemes were in operation at the same date.

Mr. Brooke: Up to 30 June, 13 agencies had been approved to operate payroll giving schemes. A further one has subsequently been approved. It is not possible to say precisely how many schemes were in operation on 30 June, but by 20 July the Inland Revenue had been notified that 1,125 employers planned to set up schemes.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide figures comparable to those given to the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore), Official Report, 17 July, of the weekly earnings after tax, national insurance and child benefit at (a) actual prices and (b) constant prices at April of (i) a single person, (ii) a married couple, (iii) a married couple with two children under 11 years of age and (iv) a married couple with four children, two under 11 years of age and one between 11 to 15 years of age and one over 16 years of age, whose gross earnings are not (1) lowest decile, (2) lowest quartile, (3) median, (4) upper quartile and (5) highest decile for April 1979 under the June 1979 tax-benefit regime at April 1987.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Clydesdale Bank

Mr. Salmond asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 17 July, why he will not specify the precise dates on which the Bank of England and his Department were first informed of the proposed purchase of the Clydesdale Bank by the National Australia Bank.

Mr. Lilley: The Bank of England in its supervisory role has confidential discussions with banks, other financial institutions and other interested parties throughout the year. In some cases, in the interests of depositors or in the wider public interest, information may be passed to the Treasury under the provisions of the Banking Act. The confidential nature of these discussions would be damaged if details, including dates, were routinely disclosed. If the hon. Member would like to write explaining any specific matter which concerns him about the dates in this case, I would be glad to consider the point.

Coinage

Mr. Shersby asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of changing from existing coinage to the revised coinage proposed in option 4 as set out in "The United Kingdom Coinage", published by the Royal Mint.

Mr. Brooke: The new 5p and 10p coins proposed in option 4 are smaller than the existing coins and would be cheaper to produce. The total saving over a 10-year period, dependent on the demand for the new coins, would be of the order of £3 million at today's prices.

MV Silver Sea

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the result of the inquiries carried out by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise into the activities of the motor vessel Silver Sea; if he will publish its report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Work on the inquiry is continuing. I expect to be able to write to the hon. Member to advise him of the outcome before the end of the recess. A copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Hansard Press

Ms. Harman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the prospects for retraining and redeployment for staff displaced by technological changes in the Hansard Press.

Mr. Brooke: Retraining options will be discussed with representatives of the trade unions involved in the event of any technological changes which affect jobs.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Brooke: The information is not available in the form requested.

The tables show the number of non-industrial staff in post (full-time equivalents) by sex from January 1979 to January 1987 by grade level (broadly equivalent grades in the open structure/administration group based on a comparison of salary scales).

Table B shows the staff of the Civil Service Department for the period January 1979 to January 1982.

From January 1983 the Treasury numbers include some of the staff who were formerly in the Civil Service Department. The remaining staff of the Civil Service Department were absorbed into the Management and Personnel Office of the Cabinet Office and are included in the Cabinet Office's numbers.

2,4,5-T

Mr. Alan W. Williams asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the European countries that have banned or restricted the use of the weedkiller 2,4,5-T.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest information we have available is that varying uses of 2,4,5-T products are permitted in Belgium, Luxembourg, France, Ireland, Denmark, Greece, Spain and Portugal. No uses are permitted in Holland, Italy or West Germany.

Food Storage (Prosecutions)

Mr. Hardy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in how many cases criminal prosecutions have been carried out or commenced in relation to the storage of surplus foods within the United Kingdom during the last two years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None.

New Zealand Butter

Mr. Grocott asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the quantity of New Zealand butter exports to the United Kingdom in (a) 1970, (b) 1979 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Quantity (tonnes)
1970	158,190
1979	119,878
1986	76,238

New Zealand Lamb

Mr. Grocott asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the quantities of New Zealand lamb exports to the United Kingdom in (a) 1970, (b) 1979 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Donald Thompson: New Zealand lamb exports to the United Kingdom for the years requested were as follows:

	tonnes
(a) 1970	297,000
(b) 1979	200,000
(c) 1986	119,000

Milk Quotas

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the milk quota cuts made in each European Community country in the years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Wholesale quota allocations for 1984-85 were based on member states' deliveries in 1981, plus 2 per cent., except for Ireland and Italy where quotas were based on 1983 deliveries. This required the following adjustments to member states 1983-84 wholesale deliveries:

Percentage adjustment to 1983-84 deliveries

	per cent.
Belgium	−4·01
Denmark	−6·59
Germany	−7·79
France	−2·52
Greece	+10·02
Ireland	−2·87
Italy	−2·55
Luxembourg	−4·96
Netherlands	−6·78
United Kingdom	−6·48

These figures do not include allocations from the Community reserve.

Wholesale quotas for all member states (other than Ireland and Italy) were reduced by a further 1 per cent. in 1985-86. No adjustment was made in 1986-87.

Information is not available to show the adjustments which were required in respect of direct sales quota.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of non-industrial staff in post (full-time equivalent) by sex and by grade level based on comparison of salary scales, in each year at 1 January, was as follows:

CAP

Mr. Corbett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list the financial contribution of the United Kingdom to the EEC common agricultural policy over the past five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The United Kingdom contributes to the Community budget as a whole rather than to individual items of Community expenditure. The following table gives the United Kingdom's contribution share of EC own resources, before any abatements, and details of Community expenditure and United Kingdom receipts under the CAP:

Year	United Kingdom contribution to budget per cent.	CAP expenditure £ million	United Kingdom receipts from CAP £ million
1982	24·2	7,294	757
1983	22·1	9,759	1,085
1984	21·8	11,150	1,311
1985	23·4	12,084	1,187
1986	[1]19·5	14,919	1,351

[1] Budget figure: outturn not available.

Mr. Grocott asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his answer of 13 July, Official Report, column 350, about the common agricultural policy, he will now state the average cost per head in the United Kingdom of the United Kingdom net contribution to the common agricultural policy in 1987.

Mr. MacGregor: I have nothing to add to my previous reply to the hon. Member.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for all common agricultural policy products the amount consumed in the United Kingdom and the difference between the world price and the threshold or other minimum price payable to United Kingdom producers;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for all common agricultural policy products the current levy, the monetary compensation amount, the threshold price and the world price.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Crop Production (Pollution)

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department is looking into the effects of air pollution on crop production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Tuberculosis Eradication Programme

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the annual cost of the tuberculosis eradication programme to the Ministry since 1981; and how much of this has been spent in controlling the disease within the badger population.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a list of the organochlorine pesticides which are approved for use in agriculture, horticulture and forestry under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986, together with details of the specific uses for which such approval has been granted.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It has been the policy of successive United Kingdom Governments to phase out the use of persistent organochlorine compounds when more suitable alternatives become available.

DDT, dieldrin and endrin no longer have any approved uses in agriculture, horticulture and forestry. Of the two remaining persistent organochlorines aldrin is only permitted for three minor agricultural uses - as a bulb dip to control narcissus fly, as a dust on compost to control vine weevil on ornamentals and for the control of wireworm on potatoes in former pasture - and chlordane may only be used as a treatment against worms on turf and lawns. These uses are kept under continuous review and will be replaced as soon as more suitable alternatives become available.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in relation to the pesticide DDT, he will (a) give his estimate of the amount of DDT which is still held on farms in the United Kingdom, (b) make arrangements for the collection and safe disposal of any remaining stocks of DDT on farms in the United Kingdom and (c) issue advice to farmers on the safe disposal of any remaining stocks of DDT on farms in the United Kingdom; when he expects to produce a revised version of MAFF booklet 2198 on guidelines for the disposal of unwanted pesticides and containers on farms and holdings; and whether the revised booklet will be made available throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Forestry Commission (Land)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total area of land which was referred to his Department by the Forestry Commission under the forestry grant consultation procedures for each of the years ended 31 March 1986 and 31 March 1987; and if he will list in the Official Report in respect of each of the area officers of his Ministry the area of land which it advised was (a) acceptable to award forestry grant and (b) inappropriate to afforest on agricultural grounds.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

European Community (Membership)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fishers and Food if he will publish in the Official Report an up-to-date revision of tables A and B of the memorandum on agriculture submitted to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee in Session 1984-85 in evidence on the financial and economic consequences of United Kingdom membership of the European Comminities (HC, 57-11, pages 64-65).

Mr. Donald Thompson: I will write to the hon. Member.

Priorities Board for Research and Development

Mr. Curry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received the second report from the Priorities Board for Research and Development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Priorities Board for Research and Development in Agriculture and Food has submitted its second report to the Agriculture Ministers and to the chairman of the Agricultural and Food Research Council. We greatly appreciate the work which Sir Kenneth Durham and the members of the board have put into their report.

The report gives advice to the sponsors about future resource allocations and priorities for the publicly-funded agricultural and food R and D effort as a whole. It also discusses a number of matters related to the R and D programme. The board considers that the allocations suggested in its first report remain generally appropriate, but it recommends an increase in the percentage allocation of resources to the non-food crops sector. This reflects the board's view of the importance of diversification in agriculture and, in particular, of farm forestry as an alternative enterprise. The increased allocation is intended to allow for a larger programme in this area.

The sponsors are agreed that, subject to a full consideration of the resource implications, the recommendations should guide the allocation of resources to the future research and development programme. Discussions will be held between the sponsors to plan the implementation of the recommendations.

The sponsors have also agreed that the report should be published. This is now being arranged and advance copies are being placed in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Pensions

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out figures showing the gross and net additional costs of awarding the full state basic pension, on the basis of citizenship or legal residence, (a) to the estimated 94,500 elderly people without entitlement to a contributory pension, and (b) to those whose contribution record is incomplete.

Mr. Scott: A residence or citizenship-based pension system would give all individuals satisfying those conditions entitlement to a full pension, irrespective of marital status or earnings history. Estimates therefore assume payment of the full rate of the single person's basic pension of £39.50 per week to all men and women, including married women currently receiving pensions based on their husbands' contribution records.

The estimated gross additional cost on retirement pensions of paying full basic pensions to those people receiving supplementary pension who are not in addition receiving any other contributory or non-contributory benefit, and to their spouses, would be about £230 million.[1] The gross additional cost of paying pensions to all pensioners in receipt of reduced-rate basic pension, graduated pension only or married women's pensions would be about £1,820 million.[2] A further £30 million would be needed to pay full-rate pensions to pensioners currently in receipt of non-contributory pensions.

Valid net costs cannot be given, as the system of income-related benefits would require some revision in the event of structural changes in the pensions system of this type.

Notes

(1) This estimate is based on a figure of 101,000 claimants with 10,000 dependent spouses and is derived from the February 1986 annual statistical inquiry. The figure of 94,500 comes from the quarterly inquiry, which does not contain details of dependants needed to calculate costs as specified in the question.

(2) Does not include the cost of paying pensions to women over 60 with no entitlement to pension based on their own contributions and who will receive married women's pensions when their husbands retire. There are no reliable estimates of numbers in this group.

Retirement Pension (Entitlement)

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures setting out by age, sex and marital status, the numbers of people above retirement age who have either no entitlement to the National Insurance retirement pension, or whose entitlement is less than the full amount.

Mr. Scott: Full information is not available in the form requested. The largest group of people over minimum pension age not receiving any form of pension are married women over 60 who have chosen to rely on their husbands' contributions for pension purposes and who have no personal entitlement until their husbands have reached age 65 and have retired, but we have no reliable estimate of their number. In addition a number of people who have chosen to defer retirement beyond minimum pension age are not receiving pensions, although they may be entitled to do so.

Table 1 shows the numbers of people above retirement age who are receiving supplementary pension and who are not in addition receiving any contributory or non-contributory benefit.

Table 2 shows the numbers receiving basic pension at less than the 100 per cent. rate, and the numbers receiving graduated pension without basic pension.

Table 3 shows the numbers receiving non-contributory pensions paid to people aged 80 or over with no entitlement to a contributory entitlement or with entitlement at less than the full rate of non-contributory pension. It also includes non-contributory pensions paid to people over pensionable age on 5 July 1948, and to the wives and widows of men entitled to receive such pensions. Non-contributory pensions are awarded subject to residence conditions.

Information in all tables has been broken down as far as possible as specified in the question.

Child Abuse

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children have been taken into care following paediatric diagnosis of sexual abuse in each of the past 10 years in (a) Cleveland, (b) Buckinghamshire, (c) Cheshire, (d) the London borough of Brent, (e) Essex and (f) Monmouth.

Mr. Newton: These figures are not at present held centrally. However in my statement to the House on 9 July at columns 526-7, I indicated our intention to arrange for the collection of national statistics on child abuse.

Dystrophic Epidermolysis Bullosa

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider setting up a special treatment unit for children suffering from dystrophic epidermolysis bullosa; and what assessment his Department has made as to the effectiveness of the private treatment being offered by establishments such as that of Professor Kozak in Gerona.

Mrs. Currie: No representations have so far been made that special treatment units for children suffering from dystrophic epidermolysis bullosa are required. The appropriate treatment of children suffering from this disorder is a matter for the doctor under his responsibility for the care of the individual patient.

NHS (Management)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the management of the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: In 1984, the Government announced that they accepted the recommendations of the NHS management inquiry, launched under the leadership of Sir Roy Griffiths. Since then, in a continuing programme to strengthen management at all levels, the following significant achievements have been made:

over 800 general managers have been appointed at regional, district and unit level with a background embracing all the main disciplines employed in the NHS together with a healthy infusion of outside experience and talent; within a framework of individual performance review and performance-related pay, incentives and rewards for outstanding managerial performance have been introduced;

a coherent and co-ordinated planning process has been put in place covering both the short term (annual programmes) and the strategic (10-year plans) periods; accountability review processes have been strengthened and now extend from national through to unit levels;

central management in my Department has been strengthened with the establishment of the Health Services Supervisory Board under my chairmanship and the NHS Management Board under the chairmanship of my hon. Friend the Minister for Health. Both boards have an appropriate blend of professional, management, business and Civil Service expertise.

As a result of these and other measures, there have been marked gains in health authority performance and results, amongst the most notable are:

record numbers of patients treated for a wider range of conditions; considerably more attention now being paid explicitly to improving the quality of services to patients, and to management development;

cost improvement programmes, of some £400 million to March 1987, and increased sales of surplus land releasing funds for other service development.

I am encouraged by the spirit of the new managers, and by what health authorities have achieved so far. I have no doubt that further improvements in performance are possible and that health authority managers will continue to set and achieve new objectives. Within the proper framework of accountability the Government will seek to secure that, through controlled delegation of responsibility, managers will have the freedom they need to run the service efficiently and effectively and bring about the further improvements in the quality of services to patients that we all desire.

[1] Figures supplied by York health authority for financial years.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average response time for ambulances answering emergency calls for each ambulance authority in the last year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: Regional and district health authorities are responsible for the day-to-day operational management and monitoring of National Health Service ambulance services, and I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Hospital Complaints Procedure

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to respond to comments on the implementation of the Hospital Complaints Procedures Act 1985, requested in circular DA(86)14; and what is the reason for the delay since September 1986 in responding.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985 to be implemented.

Mrs. Currie: The analysis of the comments received in response to the consultation paper, on non-clinical complaints sent under cover of circular DA(86)14 has been substantially completed. We are encouraged to find that many authorities are already following the procedures advocated in that circular. The comments also show that many health authorities wish to see the voluntary guidelines dealing with clinical complaints procedures also incorporated within the directions to be issued.

Discussions are continuing with the joint consultants committee on the latter proposals. We hope to issue directions later this year.

Radiation Unit (Southend)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters he has received from the genaral public about the proposal by the North East Thames regional health authority to close the radiation unit at Southend general hospital.

Mrs. Currie: We have received 15 letters which have been referred by hon. Members, together with about 6,020 letters direct from members of the public.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if there are any circumstances in which mobility allowance has been paid in respect of a period prior to the date on which a claim has been made.

Mr. Scott: The regulations enable a claim for mobility allowance to be treated as having been received on a date up to three months earlier than that on which it was received where there has been a delay in the post; and up to six months earlier where it is a claim for the renewal of a previous award which has ended during this period.

Abortions

Mr. Ken Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abortions have been carried out on handicapped persons since 1968.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the statistics are not available in the form requested; information on whether the woman is handicapped is not requested on the abortion notification form.

NHS (Waiting Times)

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to procure figures on total average waiting time for National Health Service in-patient treatment in each surgical specialty in each hospital in England and Wales on a similar basis to those figures available in Scotland.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Mr Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing what sample numbers he has and for the total average waiting time for National Health Service in-patient treatment in each surgical specialty in England and Wales.

Mr. Newton: Information on the estimated median interval between the date a patient was placed on the waiting list and the date of admission, according to specialty of treatment, is included in the annual publication "Hospital In-Patient Enquiry, Main Tables", copies of which are available in the Library.

AIDS

Mr. Butler asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimates his Department has made of the growth in AIDS infections in the United Kingdom; and if he will publish these.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) on 7 July at column 123.

Drownings

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths by drowning in England and Wales there have been in the past 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table.

NHS (Laboratory Services)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy not to privatise National Health Service laboratory services; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans to privatise National Health Service laboratory services. Where local circumstances indicate there may be advantages in obtaining particular services externally, decisions on this are a matter for the health authority concerned.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The tables show the number of staff in post by sex and grade level at 1 January each year since 1979.

The figures in the tables have been derived from personnel records and may differ from other published manpower totals.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Bowis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the reasons for the pocket money differential in supplementary benefit payments to long-term patients in mental hospitals and to boarders in residential care accommodation of £7·90 and £11·50 per week respectively; and if he will explain how these figures are calculated.

Mr. Portillo: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what checks are made on the authenticity of claims for supplementary benefit made by persons known to be itinerants who claim to be resident on property which they occupy as trespassers.

Mr. Portillo: Itinerant claimants, provided they satisfy the normal rules, are entitled to benefit in the same way as other people who claim benefit. They are required to prove their identity and, where necessary, to provide documentary evidence in support of their claim before benefit is paid.

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish an estimate using the Family Expenditure Survey 1985 of how many two-parent families with children would be on supplementary benefit level or below if the wives were not in paid work.

Mr. Scott: Since the husband might decide to increase his earnings if the wife ceased paid work, it is not possible to provide a precise estimate of how many families might then have net incomes on or below their supplementary benefit scale rates.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for supplementary benefit were made in each year since 1979 by (a) people over pension age, (b) unemployed people and (c) others; and what proportion was successful in each category.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is shown in the table.

"Health and Personal Social Services Statistics"

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to publish "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics" for England.

Mr. Newton: "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics" for England 1987 edition will be published at the end of August.

Social Security (Agreements)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state for each country in the European Community any provisions of any bilateral agreement with the United Kingdom on social security which are different from the general agreement with member states, setting out the circumstances when the differences could benefit people (a) with contributions in the United Kingdom scheme, (b) living in the United Kingdom, (c) who are United Kingdom citizens or (d) anyone else.

Mr. Scott: The United Kingdom has bilateral agreements on social security with each of the other member states of the European Community (excluding Greece). The provisions of each differ in detail as necessary to take account of the characteristics of the social security schemes concerned. The principles underlying them are the same; they are also the same as those underlying the EEC regulations on social security for migrant workers.

With the accession of the United Kingdom to the European Community, the bilateral agreements now apply only to people and matters not covered by the EEC regulations. The EEC regulations apply to all employed or self-employed people who are nationals of a member state, or who are stateless persons or refugees residing in the European Community, and to their survivors or dependents.

Generally, therefore, the bilateral agreements help only people who are not workers or, in the case of the agreements with Ireland and Germany, which are not restricted to nationals of the countries concerned, those who are not EC nationals. For such people, who move from the United Kingdom to the other country, and vice versa, the agreements regulate where their contribution liability lies, provide for aggregation of both countries' insurance under specified conditions to assist title to benefit, preserve rights to benefit and, in particular, provide for pension entitlement to be unaffected. Their provisions differ from those of the EEC regulations on points of detail only.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out for each country for which he has information (a) in the European Community, (b) in the Council of Europe and (c) with which the United Kingdom has a reciprocal agreement on social security, the conditions under which they pay retirement, old age or widows' pensions to those qualifying but currently living in the United Kingdom, and showing, in particular, whether those pensions are increased by some measure of inflation in the same way as when paid in the country concerned.

Mr. Scott: For people living in the United Kingdom, who are covered by the European Community social security regulations, all EC member states award their pensions on the same terms as if the pensioners were living in the country of payment and pay them in full, including cost of living increases.

The bilateral social security conventions which the United Kingdom has with other countries—including all the member states of the Council of Europe—vary in scope. It is normal, though, for such agreements (a) to ensure that neither country operates any discrimination on nationality grounds in access to benefits and (b) to provide for award of pensions by each country to people in the other on the same basis as if the pensioner were living in the awarding country, with cost of living increases being paid as they become due.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out separately the dates since June 1979 on which his officials have met their counterparts from (a) Australia, (b) New Zealand and (c) Canada to discuss the relevant reciprocal agreement on social security; what specific aspects of the relevant agreement they discussed; when future meetings are planned; and what specific matters are on the agenda.

Mr. Scott: Since June 1979 officials from the Department have met their counterparts from Australia, Canada and New Zealand on the following dates:

Australia
September 1980
March 1981
April/May 1982
September 1983
September 1986

Canada
May 1979
December 1982
February 1983
August 1983

New Zealand
March 1981
November 1982

Officials meet to discuss the operation of the agreements and what changes, if any, may be needed. Details of the negotiations are confidential. In addition to the meetings listed there is regular informal contact. The only planned future meeting is with officials of the Department of Social Security, Australia, next month.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out for each other country for which he has information, apart from any country with which the United Kingdom has a reciprocal agreement on social security, the conditions under which their citizens living in the United Kingdom can be paid a retirement, old age or widow's pension.

Mr. Scott: This information, which is not readily available, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Retirement Pensioners

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will bring up to date the answer he gave to the hon. Member for Barking on 15 May 1986, Official Report, column 523-526.

Mr. Scott: The answer given to the hon. Member has already been updated in my predecessor's reply to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 14 May 1987 at columns 349-352.

Radiologists and Radiographers

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many radiologists have been employed in (a) the National Health Service and (b) the private health sector, from 1979 to the latest available year.

Mrs. Currie: Numbers of consultant radiologists in the National Health Service in England are set out in the table. Information is not held on numbers of radiologists in the private sector.

Health Authority (McColl Report)

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which organisations were consulted about the membership of the new health authority which was set up by his Department arising from the McColl report.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 21 July.

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements have been made to ensure that the views of consumers of disablement services are taken into account by the new health authority which was set up by his Department arising from the McColl report.

Mr. Scott: The Disablement Services Authority is responsible for making its own arrangements for taking into account the views of its patients. I am confident that the authority will do so effectively.

Disabled People (Representatives)

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to issue for consultation draft regulations under section 1 of the Disabled Persons Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: We intend to consult interested parties before any regulations are made. No decision has yet been made on the timing of the implementation of section 1.

NHS (Hospitals)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all National Health Service hospitals: (a) of over 900 beds and (b) which have been built, or added to since 1980 to make the combined old and new buildings over 900.

Mrs. Currie: Information available centrally shows that the acute/general hospitals listed provide over 900 beds. Of these Ipswich hospital, Queens medical centre and Leicester general hospital have had phases added since 1980 to bring their total number of beds over 900.

North Tees General Hospital.
St. James University Hospital, Leeds.

Nottingham City Hospital.
University Hospital Nottingham (Queens Medical Centre).
Northern General (Sheffield).
Ipswich Hospital.
East Birmingham General Hospital.
Walsgrave General (Coventry).

Withington Hospital (South Manchester).

Clinical and Non-clinical Academic Staff

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the implications for his Department's research programme of the pay settlement for non-clinical academic staff and the more recent pay settlement for clinical academic staff.

Mr. Newton: The Department estimates that these pay settlements will increase the salary costs of the research programme by £950,000 in 1987-88.

Maternity and Death Grants

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the current levels of (a) universal maternity grant, uprated in line with inflation since 1969 and (b) death grant, uprated in line with inflation since 1957.

Mr. Portillo: On the basis of the movement of the retail price index, the value in April 1987 of (a) the former maternity grant would be £144·25 compared to its value in November 1969 and (b) the former death grant would be about £210 compared to its value in January 1958.

Cook-chill Catering

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will carry out an investigation into the use of cook-chill catering in the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: No. Cook-chill is a well-established catering system. The available scientific evidence is that, providing existing guidelines on its operation are followed, it is microbiologically and nutritionally sound. The Department published guidelines for cook-chill in 1980, and further material was included in the 1986 manual "Health Service Catering – Hygiene".

Departmental Records, Newcastle

Mr. Matthew Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) which Government Departments have access to his Department's records at the Newcastle office; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the degree of confidentiality of his Department's records at Newcastle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The rules governing the confidentiality of personal information in social security records apply equally to all the Department's offices – both local and central.

Information obtained from an individual for social security purposes is treated as confidential and to be used only for that purpose. It is not normally made available to other Government Departments.

There has to be close liaison between our offices and the Department of Employment and Inland Revenue because they act as agents for the Department in the payment of unemployment benefit and the collection of contributions respectively. Information from social security records necessary to the carrying out of these statutory functions may be disclosed to them.

In other circumstances, where there is no statutory function, requests for information from social security records made by other Government Departments are considered only if the information would prevent the duplication of public funds, would help in the prosecution of a serious crime or would meet the welfare needs of the individual concerned.

Social Fund

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, further to his reply of 2 July, Official Report, column 148, to the hon. Member for Hornchurch, there are any plans for funding independent research into the social fund.

Mr. Scott: There are no such plans at present.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in what respects the conditions for obtaining emergency payments from the social fund will be more restrictive than the provisions of the Supplementary Benefit (Urgent Cases) Regulations.

Mr. Scott: Our proposals for emergency payments from the social fund were set out in part 6 of the consultation paper "The Social Fund Manual: Draft Guidance and Directions for DHSS Social Fund Officers", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Deliveries

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list for the years 1985 and 1986 the estimated percentages of women delivering in (a) England and (b) England and Wales (i) whose labours were induced, (ii) whose labours were of spontaneous onset and (iii) who had elected caesarean sections;

(2) if he will list for the years 1985 and 1986 the estimated percentages of women delivered in (a) England and (b) England and Wales whose deliveries were (i) spontaneous, including abnormal presentation of head and breach spontaneous, (ii) instrumental including forceps vacuum and breach extractions, (iii) caesarean section and (iv) other and unspecified means.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Pension and Benefit Payments (Millom)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make an urgent inquiry into the financial hardship and distress being experienced by people in Millom, Cumbria, whose pension and benefit payments are being delayed as a result of the industrial dispute at his Department's office in Barrow in Furness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: An emergency payment centre is open at Barrow in Furness to handle claims from people in need of financial assistance. Voluntary organisations, including the Citizens Advice Bureau in Millom, Cumbria, have been advised about the arrangements and supplies of emergency claim forms have been distributed to them and other organisations in the area covered by the emergency centre. Special arrangements have also been made with the post office to ensure that people who are normally paid by order book can continue to receive their benefit allowances.

Mammography Facilities (Devon)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department intends to make additional funds available in the current financial year to facilitate the provision of mammography facilities in Devon in addition to the updating of the Devon family practitioner committee computer so that it can be used for both cytology and mammography recall and monitoring.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply today to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs).

The South Western regional health authority has chosen Cornwall as the location for its first centre for breast cancer screening. Services to cover the remainder of the region are planned for the next two years; no additional funds for Devon are therefore required this year.

Computer Facilities (Devon)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by what date his Department's contribution of £25,000 will have been paid to the Devon family practitioner committee to update its computer so that it is able to perform the four functions set out in the letters to the family practioner committee from his Department dated 26 June, and from his Parliamentary Under-Secretary to the hon. Member for Tiverton; and what proportion of the cost will be paid by each of the four district health authorities in Devon, Exeter, Torbay, Plymouth and North Devon, respectively.

Mrs. Currie: As my noble Friend the Baroness Trumpington explained in her letter the question of funding for the upgrading of Devon family practitioner committee's computer is under consideration. It is not yet possible to specify when funds may be available nor what proportion of costs may be contributed by the health authorities concerned.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) favourable and (b) unfavourable decisions on applications for severe disablement allowance have been made to date.

Mr. Scott: As at 7 April 1987, 29,525 and 23,175 respectively.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will classify awards of severe disablement allowance to (a) men, (b) single women and (c) married women according to whether they (i) were exempt from the 80 per cent. test on the grounds of age, (ii) were passported to the 80 per cent. test or (iii) passed the 80 per cent. test.

Mr. Scott: The available information as at 7 April 1987 is as follows:

	Men	Single and Divorced Women and Widows	Married Women
Exempt from disablement condition (under 20 when incapacity arose or claim links with non-contributory invalidity pension or housewives non-contributory invalidity pension)	7,715	5,713	694
Passported to disablement condition	1,689	1,298	6,173
Disablement condition satisfied	1,466	900	3,877
Total	10,870	7,911	10,744

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will classify refusals of severe disablement allowance to (a) men, (b) single women and (c) married women according to the following reasons (i) over pension age, (ii) not incapable of work, (iii) failed the 80 per cent. test, (iv) failed residence and presence conditions and (v) other.

Mr. Scott: The available information as at 7 April 1987 is as follows:

	Men	Single and Divorced Women and Widows	Married Women
Over pension age	451	277	992
Not incapable of work	261	188	424
Disablement condition not satisfied	3,629	2,202	10,111
Other	1,997	961	1,682
Total	6,338	3,628	13,209

Separate information is not available on the number who failed the residence or presence conditions. These cases are included under "Other".

Supplementary Benefit Claimants (Mortgage Interest Payments)

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many supplementary benefit claimants have had only half their mortgage interest payments met up to the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Personal Pensions

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to ensure that independent advice is available to anyone considering whether to contribute to a personal pension scheme.

Mr. Scott: Rules made under the Financial Services Act will impose stringent requirements on investment businesses, including firms advising on and selling personal pensions in the form of insurance policies and authorised unit trusts. The rules aim at ensuring high standards of integrity, fairness and skill in dealing with customers and the provision of adequate information to individuals contemplating taking out a personal pension. In particular, the rules will require firms advising on and selling life insurance policies and authorised unit trusts to do so either as representatives of a single company or group or on a fully independent basis and to make their status clear. Banks and building societies, who may provide deposit-based personal pensions, are already regulated under separate legislation: as noted in the Department's policy statement "Investor Protection Requirements for Personal and Occupational Pension Schemes", published in April, these arrangements are being supplemented by special measures in relation to personal pensions.

Income Support

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services where the general and transitional draft regulations on income support are available; to what groups; and on what basis.

Mr. Scott: The draft general and transitional regulations on income support have not formally been laid before the House and therefore are not available through the usual outlets for statutory instruments. However, when copies of the draft regulations were placed in the Library, they were also sent to the departmental trade unions and to certain organisations which had been involved in discussions on income support earlier. In addition, the Department has been making available copies of the draft regulations to interested bodies and organisations within reason on request. The same arrangements exist for the draft family credit regulations.

Benefits (Deductions)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider altering the social security regulations to prevent deductions from benefits based on the assumption of income from a capital endowment from which actual income is legally restricted.

Mr. Scott: If the hon. Member would care to let me have more details I shall write to him.

Social Fund Commissioner

Ms. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to appoint a social fund commissioner; whether the post will be advertised; whether it will be a full-time appointment; and what salary will be offered.

Mr. Scott: We are currently considering these and other matters relating to the appointment of the social fund commissioner.

Medicines Commission (Annual Report)

Mr. Malins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the Medicines Commission's annual report for 1986.

Mr. Newton: I have received the report and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with section 5(2) of the Medicines Act 1968. Bound volumes will shortly be placed in the Library, containing the 1986 reports of the Medicines Commission, the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Veterinary Products Committee, the British Pharmacopoeia Commission, the Committee on the Review of Medicines and the Committee on Dental and Surgical Materials.

District Health Authorities (Chairmen)

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will be appointing new chairmen to district health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The term of office of 90 chairmen of district health authorities ends on 31 March 1988 and we are currently seeking nominations for new chairmen. If hon. Members wish to recommend any individuals as chairmen I invite them to write to me over the next month or so. Reappointments and changes will be announced in due course.

Breast Cancer Screening

Mr. Simon Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the national breast cancer screening programme.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 30 June 1987, c. 364-5]: Regional health authorities have now decided on the locations of their first breast cancer screening centres to be operational by March 1988. The locations are:

Regional health authority	Locations
North Western	Manchester[1]
Trent	Nottingham[1]
South East Thames	Camberwell[1]
South West Thames	Guildford[1]
North West Thames	Barnet
North East Thames	Epping[2]
Mersey	Liverpool
West Midlands	Stoke-on-Trent
Northern	Gateshead
Wessex	Southampton
Yorkshire	Huddersfield[2]
Oxford	Aylesbury Vale[2]
East Anglian	Suffolk[2]
South Western	Cornwall[2]

[1] Centres which will provide a national training service.
[2] With mobile unit.

Some regional health authorities are planning to start further centres before March 1988. My March 1990 there will be sufficient centres to provide a nationwide service.

Private Patients

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1979 (a) in both money terms and real terms the income received from private in-patients and (b) the number of such patients in each payment category.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 13 July 1987, c. 375]: The available information is as follows:

Services in England under section 65 of the National Health Services Act 1977

Year	In-patient cases treated[1]	Income (£'000)	Income (£'000 in 1985-86 prices)
1979-80	91,128	33,320	53,783
1980-81	98,565	42,619	57,990
1981-82	97,739	49,344	61,113
1982-83	80,686	46,164	53,319
1983-84	82,938	49,494	54,709
1984-85	77,489	48,687	51,610
1985-86	70,782	51,787	51,787

Notes:
1. In-patient cases treated ([1]discharges and deaths) relate to calendar years, not financial years. (Figures shown against 1979-80 is of patients for 1979, and so on.)
2. Information on income derived from annual accounts of health authorities.
3. Actual income expressed in 1985-86 prices by the use of the gross domestic product deflator.
4. Later information is not yet available.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements exist to ensure that no profits accrue from national charges to private patients as a result of health authorities with relatively high private patient costs opting out of the national system and establishing their own charges.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 13 July 1987, c. 375]: The central list of charges for private patient treatment is calculated to recover the estimated national average full cost of treating patients in each class of hospital; no element for profit is included. No health authority, as far as is known, has opted to move entirely away from the central list of charges for 1987-88 and therefore we would not expect this year's overall income to exceed costs. We intend when preparing the central list of charges for coming years to review each time the basis on which it is calculated and will make any changes necessary to ensure that balance between cost and income is maintained.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list (a) those health authorities which have chosen to set their own charges to private patients for all treatment and (b) those health authorities which have chosen to set their own charges to private patients for some treatments.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 13 July 1987, c. 375]: No health authority has reported yet that it has chosen to set charges to private patients in the current financial year which differ in every respect from the central list of charges. Health authorities which are known to have set charges which differ in some respects from those in the central list are as follows:

Newcastle
North Tyneside
Airedale
Leeds Eastern Cambridge
Huntingdon
Hillingdon
Paddington and North Kensington
Riverside
Tower Hamlets
Camberwell
Lewisham and North Southwark
Wandsworth
Aylesbury Vale

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many exceptionally cold weather payments were made by region in 1986-87.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 13 July 1987 c. 381]: The number of £5 exceptionally cold weather payments made by each region in the winter of 1986-87, is as follows:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Education

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will respond to the recommendations for the training of further education staff with responsibilities for special educational needs made in his report "A Special Professionalism."

Mr. Dunn: This report, the result of a study sponsored by the Department, puts forward a set of training programmes to meet the requirements of groups of staff with different degrees of special needs involvement, as its core recommendation. As the report recognises the full possibilities envisaged could be achieved only over the longer term. The Government will carefully consider these, and any steps that might be taken meantime. It has encouraged the development of some of the programmes by designating special needs training for local authority advisers, college managers and special needs co-ordinators as a national priority area for local education authority training grants in the present financial year. I am pleased to report that the Manpower Services Commission has alocated £40,000 to the further education unit for the development of a programme for mainstream teaching staff with a major special needs involvement in collaboration with the National Bureau for Handicapped Students.

Schools (Financial Delegations)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list those local education authorities which operate schemes of financial delegations to schools.

Mr. Dunn: A summary undertaken last year indicated that among the local education authorities operating schemes of financial delegation to some or all of their schools are the following:

Berkshire
Buckinghamshire
Cambridgeshire
Cheshire
Cornwall
Cumbria
Devon
East Sussex
Gloucestershire
Hereford and Worcester
Hertfordshire
Humberside
Lincolnshire
Norfolk
Northumberland
Oxfordshire
Somerset
Surrey
West Sussex
Calderdale
ILEA
Solihull

Since then a pilot scheme has been introduced in some schools in Kent.

Ethnic Pupils

Mr. Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will issue for consultation the draft circular on the collection of ethnically based statistics on school pupils.

Mr. Dunn: The draft circular has been issued for consultation today and copies have been placed in the Library. In addition, 4 local education authorities — Berkshire, Bradford, Cleveland and Wolverhampton — have been invited to set up pilot schemes for the collection of ethnically based statistics on school pupils during the academic year 1987-88.

Lecturers

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the number of lecturers in higher education in order to meet the Government's projected increase in student access outlined in the White Paper, "Meeting the Challenge"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The number of lecturers in higher education is a matter for those who employ them, in the light of the various demands on the resources available and taking into account such factors as the range of provision and the number of students in each institution. The Government will continue to make funds available for higher education overall at a realistic level, in line with what the nation can afford.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on average pay levels of higher and further education lecturers, and higher education lecturers, respectively, in each or all the the following (a) England and Wales, (b) Great Britain, (c) universities in the United Kingdom, (d) polytechnics in England and Wales and (e) all non-university higher education in Great Britain; and what equivalent information he has, converted to pound sterling, in relation to (i) France, (ii) Spain, (iii) Italy, (iv) West Germany and (v) the United States of America.

Mrs. Rumbold: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Higher Education (Access)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science by how much he intends to increase the projected resources outlined in Cm. 56 in public sector higher education in order to finance the projected increase in access outlined in the Government's White Paper, "Meeting the Challenge".

Mr. Jackson: The Government's public expenditure plans for 1988-89 and the two succeeding years are under review. Funding for the polytechnics and colleges in 1988-89 will be determined in the context of overall decisions about local authority expenditure this autumn. The number of students in the system will be one of the factors taken into account in this process.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether it is his intention that the projected increase in student access outlined in the Government White Paper, "Meeting the Challenge", will be concentrated in institutions presently under local education authority control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government are planning for a further overall increase of 50,000 in the number of higher education students by 1990. Actual numbers, and where they study, will depend on various factors, in particular on the recruitment decisions of individual institutions.

Higher Education

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide figures relating to the cost to central and local government of higher education, full-tine equivalent students in the university (United Kingdom) and non-university (England and Wales) sectors, respectively, for 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86; and what is the estimate for 1986-87.

Mr. Jackson: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Physical Education

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to set up a working group to recommend attainment targets and programmes of study for physical education, within the framework of the Government's proposals for a national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The first subject working groups are being set up in science, mathematics and English. Other groups will be set up as soon as possible. My right hon. Friend is still considering the sequence of working groups for the foundation subjects other than science, mathematics and English.

Working Group on Physical Education

Mr. Denis Howell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he intends to include representatives of swimming associations in the working group on physical education to be set up within the framework of the Government's proposals for a national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: Members of subject working groups are being appointed for their personal knowledge and expertise, not as representatives of institutions or bodies. Each subject working group will have a small membership comprising a chairman and members drawn mainly from the headteachers and teachers of primary and secondary schools, local education authority advisers, higher education and the world of exployment. The intention is that, between them, members will have knowledge of and expertise in all the major aspects of their foundation subjects.

School Meals

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many children in each education authority area received free school meals in 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and the current year;

(2) how many children in each education authority area received free school meals in 1987; and what are the equivalent figures for 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Dunn: The figures requested are collected annually in October as part of the school meals census. The data are published and copies of the relevant reports are in the Library of the House. It was not possible to collect this information in October 1985. The results of the 1987 census will not be available until early 1988.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the total numbers of staff employed in the school meals service by education authority area in the current year, and what are the equivalent figures for 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Dunn: The precise information requested is not collected by my Department. The annual school meals census for October 1986, a copy of which is in the Library, gives a breakdown of the number of kitchen and canteen staff; midday supervisors and other adults present on the day of the census. This information was not collected in previous years.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mrs. Rumbold: Estimated expenditure on management and computer consultancy in the current financial year is £414,112. In addition we estimate expenditure of approximately £400,000 associated with the privatisation of the Plant Breeding Institute.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in tabular form (a) the number of teachers in each local education authority in England and Wales, (b) the number of pupils in each and (c) the teacher-pupil ratio of each.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested for each local education authority in England in January 1986 is given in the following table: Figures for local education authorities in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Technology and Computers

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on present measures to increase instruction and application of technology and computers in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 22 July to my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves).

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is able to give more information about the Government's plans for grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I intend to bring forward legislation to enable the governors of county and voluntary maintained schools, with the support of the parents, to apply for maintenance by grant from central Government instead of maintenance by local education authorities. The Government believe that this proposal, which will extend to all secondary schools and to larger primary schools, will add a new and powerful dimension to the ability of parents to exercise choice within the publicly provided sector of education.

I am today publishing a consultation paper which explains the Government's proposals in detail. I should be glad to receive comments in response to it by 30 September 1987. Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

National Curriculum

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the Government's plans to introduce a national curriculum in schools.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I propose to bring forward legislation in the autumn to introduce a national curriculum for pupils age 5 to 16 in maintained schools in England and Wales. We are today publishing a consultation document which develops in more detail the proposals I announced to the Education, Science and Arts Select Committee on 7 April.

This historic reform represents the culmination of over 10 years of debate which has resulted in general agreement about the aims of school education and widespread support for the idea of a national curriculum. Our legislation will now secure for pupils of all abilities and in all areas the benefits of a good and relevant curriculum, which is essential if standards are to be raised. A national curriculum will also ensure that clear objectives are set for all pupils within a framework which pupils, teachers, parents, employers and others understand and can support. Pupils' progress towards their objectives will be measured so as to ensure that they are achieving the best they can.

Comments on the main legislation are being invited by 30 September. There will be further consultations as more detailed proposals come forward in relation to individual subjects.

Copies of the consultation document have been placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tuvalu (International Trust Fund)

Mr. Wells asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what provision he is making to pay the United Kingdom contribution of 8·5 million Australian dollars to the International Trust Fund for Tuvalu.

Mr. Chris Patten: Ratification of the agreement establishing the trust fund, which was laid before the House on 25 June for the requisite 21 days, can now be given effect. Financial provision will be sought in a winter supplementary estimate for the overseas aid vote. Pending that vote, urgent expenditure estimated at about £3·86 million will be met by a repayable advance from the contingencies fund.

Technical Co-operation Training Programme

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many awards and of what amount were made under the technical co-operation training programme in the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: A total of 10,500 awards were held under the technical co-operation training programme during the financial year 1986-87 at a cost of £58·7 million.

Training Schemes

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a list of the various training schemes abroad for foreign nationals which have been financed by his Department; if he will further give in each case the object of the training courses; and what have been the total sums involved, in each of the most recent three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall write to my hon. Friend and place copies in the Library of the House.

Development Aid

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present level of overseas development aid given to (a) Africa, (b) South and South East Asia and (c) Latin America.

Mr. Chris Patten: Gross public expenditure on overseas aid in 1986 was:

	£ million
Africa	285
South and South East Asia	302
Latin America	22

Somalia and Mozambique

Ms. Quin asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he will make to his European colleagues within the Council of Ministers concerning the granting of extra emergency food aid from the European Economic Community to Somalia and Mozambique; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Community agreed earlier this month to allocate another 55,000 tonnes of food aid to Mozambique, in addition to 60,000 tonnes allocated in March, and to provide 13,500 tonnes to Somalia. We are monitoring the situation in both countries closely, and will urge further Community help if required.

Ms. Quin asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what extra emergency aid the Government is planning to provide for Somalia and Mozambique in view of the shortage of food in both countries at the present time.

Mr. Chris Patten: We are already delivering 7,000 tonnes of bilateral food aid to Mozambique, and we have pledged a further 30,000 tonnes. In all, we are providing nearly £14 million of bilateral emergency help this year. For Somalia, we provided veterinary drugs and other emergency aid during the drought, as well as tarpaulins when the drought was ended by floods. The latest Food and Agriculture Organisation report shows that at the end of June the overall food supply situation remained satisfactory. I am ready to consider providing further emergency aid to both Somalia and Mozambique in the light of their needs and what other donors are doing.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Pension Scheme

Mr. Hanley asked the Lord Privy Seal whether he proposes to refer the parliamentary pension scheme to the Top Salaries Review Body.

Mr. Wakeham: I have today written to the chairman of the TSRB asking the TSRB to review the parliamentary pension scheme. In my letter I drew his attention to the anomalies in the scheme which had been raised during the passage of the Parliamentary and Other Pensions Act 1987. I referred also to specific issues about which Members have expressed concern during our discussion of the proposals in that Act, and to a particular point which had been raised earlier in the House of Lords. In addition, I have asked the TSRB to consider the pension arrangements for the Lord Chancellor, the Speaker and the Prime Minister, and to look at the possibility of introducing severance payments for Ministers and officeholders other than those in the House of Lords who can already receive them.

A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

EC Reports (Debates)

Mr. Robertson asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will make arrangements for debates on the six-month reports on the European Community to take place within two months of them being placed before the House.

Mr. Wakeham: It is the Government's policy to arrange for debates on the six-monthly White Papers on developments in the European Community to be held as soon as practicable after publication. The exact timing will depend on the pressure of other business before the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Law Centres

Mr. Vaz asked the Attorney-General if he will list the number of law centres currently in existence; how many are in receipt of central Government funds; how many are known to have closed since 1970 due to lack of funds; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There is no central Government register of law centres, nor is information held centrally on how many have closed since 1970 due to lack of funds. However, there are 57 members of the Law Centres Federation (this includes Small Heath community law centre from which local authority funding is, I understand, being withdrawn); and I know of three others which are not members of the federation.

Seven law centres and the Law Centres Federation receive funds from the Lord Chancellor's Department. A further seven law centres received urban programme support during the last financial year.

The Government accept that law centres may, depending on local circumstances, have a part to play in the provision of legal services as a supplement to the legal aid and legal advice and assistance schemes. The establishment of and provision of support for law centres, are, however, seen as essentially matters for local decision and initiative.

Solicitors

Mr. Vaz asked the Attorney-General how much public money has been paid to private solicitors through (a) the criminal legal aid scheme, and (b) the civil legal aid scheme in each of the last 10 years.

The Attorney-General: The table gives the gross amounts paid to solicitors through (a) the criminal legal aid scheme and (b) the civil legal aid scheme in each of the last 10 years. It is not possible to separate the amounts paid to solicitors and to counsel for criminal legal aid in the higher courts for the years before 1984-85.

Council for Licensed Conveyancers

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Attorney-General what arrangements will be made for hon. Members and other interested persons to make representations about the scheme provided for in paragraph 4 of schedule 3 to the Administration of Justice Act 1985 and comments on it (a) while the preparation of that scheme is under consideration by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers, (b) when a draft for that scheme has been prepared by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers but has not yet been submitted to the Lord Chancellor and (c) when the draft for that scheme has been submitted to the Lord Chancellor and is or is about to be under consideration by him.

The Attorney-General: (a) None; (b) the Council for Licensed Conveyancers will send a draft of the scheme to licensed conveyancers and other interested parties, seeking their views; (c) a draft of the scheme will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Attorney-General whether an appointment will be made to bring up to 10 the number of members of the Council for Licensed Conveyancers as is provided for in paragraph 3 of schedule 3 to the Administration of Justice Act 1985; and whether a practising conveyancer will be appointed to fill the vacancy.

The Attorney-General: Mr. Peter Davis, a practising licensed conveyancer and the secretary of the National Association of Conveyancers, was appointed to the Council for Licensed Conveyancers as from 16 July 1987. There are now 11 members of the council, including the chairman.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Attorney-General what was the cost of the Council for Licensed Conveyancers for the first year of its operation from March 1986.

The Attorney-General: The cost for licensed conveyancers for the year from 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987 was £102,996·83. The financial year of the council runs from 1 April to 31 March and disproportionate cost would be involved in trying to obtain figures for 1 March 1986 to 28 February 1987.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Attorney-General what staff the Council for Licensed Conveyancers has; what are the ages and qualifications of the secretary and assistant secretary and the education/examinations officer of that council; and what was the total for wages and salaries and employer's national insurance contributions paid out by that council in its first year since March 1986.

The Attorney-General: The Council for Licensed Conveyancers has six staff comprising the secretary, the assistant secretary (who is also the education and examination officer), two administrative officers and two administrative assistants.

The secretary is aged 38, holds an LLB degree and is a barrister; the assistant secretary is aged 25 and holds a BA degree (in law and economics).

The wages and salaries and employers' national insurance contributions paid out by the council in the year 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987 totalled £47,102·84. The council's financial year runs from 1 April to 31 March and disproportionate cost would be incurred in trying to obtain figures for year 1 March 1986 to 28 February 1987.

Land Registries

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Attorney-General if he will bring up to the latest convenient date the information about the average completion times in working days taken by each of the district land registries to act on applications relating to title which he gave in an answer on 9 April, Official Report, columns 355 and 356.

The Attorney-General: The table shows for each district land registry the average completion times in working days at the end of June 1987 for each category of substantive application.

Judges

Mr. Vaz asked the Attorney-General what information the Lord Chancellor's Department collects on the previous political activities, including standing for Parliament, of people being considered for appointment as High Court judges.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's policy is to appoint (or recommend for appointment) to every judicial post the candidate who appears to him best qualified to fill it and to perform its duties, regardless of political allegiance. In the course of considering candidates for appointment, information is often received from the candidate himself about his past and present political activities (including, for example, whether he has ever stood for Parliament) as part of the information he gives about his general background and interests.

Mentally Handicapped Persons

Mr. Ken Hargreaves asked the Attorney-General how many successful prosecutions for unlawful sexual intercourse with a defective there have been since June 1987.

The Attorney-General: None.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves asked the Attorney-General how many cases are under consideration by the Director of Public Prosecutions and Crown Prosecution Service relating to alleged unlawful sexual intercourse with a defective; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Three cases relating to alleged unlawful sexual intercourse with a mental defective are under consideration by the Crown Prosecution Service. Five cases are at present before the courts.

Civil Justice Review

Mr. Fatchett asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the progress the Lord Chancellor's Department is making with the housing aspects of its review of civil justice; what timetable it is working to with regard to further action; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Good progress is being made on every aspect of the review and it is hoped that recommendations on all the matters it has covered will be available to my noble and learned Friend early in 1988.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Attorney-General if he will list the organisations which submitted responses to the Lord Chancellor's Department's civil justice review's housing cases consultation paper; if he will place copies of these submissions in the Library; and if he will make available the summary of these submissions prepared for the civil justice review's advisory committee.

The Attorney-General: Once the review is completed, for which the target is early 1988, my noble and learned Friend will consider how much information about the responses should be made available; there have so far been some 700 responses to the six consultation papers, and some have been offered on the understanding that they would not be published.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Attorney-General what is the estimated expenditure of the Lord Chancellor's Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

The Attorney-General: The estimated expenditure of the Lord Chancellor's Deprtment in the current financial year on management and computer consultancy is £367,500.

Wills (Publication)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Attorney-General what representations he has received relating to the disadvantages of the practice of publication of wills; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor receives representations from time to time that embarrassment is caused to testators' families by the publication of wills in newspapers. However, wills are available for public inspection both to prevent fraud and abuse and to enable benficiaries and creditors to discover whether it is worth making any claim against the estate concerned.

Mortgage Repossessions

Mr. Battle asked the Attorney-General how many court actions relating to mortgage repossessions occurred in Leeds, West in each year since 1979.

The Attorney-General: Figures relating solely to Leeds, West are not available. The number of mortgage actions for possession entered in Leeds county court in each year since 1982 (the first year for which figures are available for individual county courts) were:

	Number
1982	803
1983	508
1984	558

Mr. Corbyn asked the Attorney-General if he will provide a table of the number of appeals to immigration adjudicators allowed, dismissed or withdrawn in 1986 and in the first quarter of 1987, broken down by category of appeal and nationality of applicant.

The Attorney-General: For 1986 and the first quarter of 1987, statistics for the number of appeals to the immigration adjudicators which were referred, allowed, dismissed or withdrawn are as shown in the table, with a breakdown by category of appeal, and information regarding the origin of the applicant. Information regarding the precise nationality of individual applicants is not available.

ENERGY

Magnox Reactors

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether any British electricity board magnox reactors have ever been modified to optimise military grade plutonium production.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) on 24 February 1982 at column 397.

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will update to 31 March 1987 the information on thermal energy generated and spent fuel discharged by each of the Central Electricity Generating Board magnox reactors given in reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 26 June 1987, Official Report, column 269;

(2) if he will update to 31 March the information on the allocation of plutonium produced in the Central Electricity Generating Board and South of Scotland Electricity Board magnox reactors given in reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 21 July 1986, Official Report, columns 10-11.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 2 July 1987, c. 128]: The information is as follows:

Station	Thermal output (Gwh)	Fuel discharged (tonnes u)
Bradwell	6,624	60
Berkeley	4,264	34
Hinkley Point A	14,487	123
Trawsfynydd	12,453	90

Notes:
(a) These figures are derived from the known tonnage of fuel elements and their estimated overall average irradiation and cannot be accurately calculated.
(b) As for (a) About 20 per cent. of amount shown was held by BNFL.
(c) and (d) This material is held at Sellafield on behalf of CEGB and SSEB.
(e) About 20 per cent. of amount shown was held by BNFL.
(g) The balance of plutonium produced in the boards Magnox reactors was consigned to the United States before 1971 under the United States/United Kingdom defence agreement and as stated by the Prime Minister on 21 April 1964 was used by the United States for civil purposes. Because of the barter arrangements under which plutonium was consigned it would not be in the national interest to publish the figure.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether he has any information subsequent to the statement by the then Prime Minister, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, on 2 April 1964, concerning the specific use to which the electricity board magnox plutonium consigned to the United States has been put since this date; and whether there are any plans for future export of electricity board plutonium to the United States of America;

(2) whether all consignments of plutonium arising from British civil electricity board magnox reactors and exported to the United States of Ameria have been covered by bilateral peaceful end use restriction nuclear safeguards or International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

(3) whether all exports of plutonium arising from British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, Central Electricity Generating Board or South of Scotland Electricity Board reactors exported to the United States since May 1979 have been covered by peaceful end use safeguards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Mullin asked the Secretary of State for Energy if British Nuclear Fuels plc has physically separate stores for plutonium arising from: (a) Calder hall and Chapelcross magnox reactors, (b) Central Electricity Generating Board magnox reactors and (c) South of Scotland Electricity Board magnox reactors after its processing through the Windscale B205 reprocessing plant at Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Calder hall and Chapelcross material is segregated from safeguarded stocks.

Mr. Mullin asked the Secretary of State for Energy what specific safeguarding arrangements apply to plutonium stored at Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All civil plutonium stored at Sellafield is under Euratom safeguards. The main elements of the safeguards inspection arrangements for Sellafield agreed with Euratom were given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Walker) in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 4 June 1986 at columns 594-95.

Mr. Morley asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to make an announcement on the publication of plutonium production figures.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to the hon. Member for Meirionydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 22 April, at column 547, and 5 May, at column 304. Information relating to the allocation of plutonium from generating board reactors for 1986-87 is given in an answer today to the hon. Member for Meirionydd Nant Conwy.

Sellafield (Inspections)

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions, in what numbers, and for what length of time Euratom safeguards inspectors have been present at British Nuclear Fuels plc Sellafield nuclear site since March 1986; and whether Euratom inspectors have access to the B205 reprocessing plant at the Windscale works, Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As stated in replies to questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 4 June 1986, at columns 594-95, and from my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt) on 30 January 1987, at column 404, Euratom inspectors have access to all civil material at Sellafield on a continuing basis. On average, three Euratom inspectors attend inspections.

British Coal Corporation

Mr. Illsley asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether there are any plans to sell in part or in whole the British Coal Corporation workshops.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am not aware of any plans.

Sullom Voe

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends to meet members of Shetland Islands council to discuss the licence of the Sullom Voe oil terminal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to meet members of the Sullom Voe Association to discuss the operation of the oil terminal.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have no such plans at present.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy what, over the last 12 months, has been the average current daily oil throughput of the Sullom Voe oil terminal.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The latest published figure is for 1986 when the terminal received 54·8 million tonnes of crude oil, an average of 150,137 tonnes per day.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the expected throughput of oil of the Sullom Voe oil terminal from now to 31 December 1999.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The throughput is declining; 1986 was probably the peak year, but the outturn to 1999 will depend on the performance of those fields currently feeding the terminal, existing discoveries which may be connected, and new discoveries which may be made and tied into the Brent and Ninian pipeline systems in the interim.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last discussed the operation of the Sullom Voe oil terminal with the participants.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have had no such discussion, but my officials are in frequent touch both with BP, which operates the Ninian pipeline system and also operates the Sullom Voe terminal on behalf of the Ninian and Brent pipeline groups, and with Shell/Esso which operates the Brent pipeline system.

Coal Industry

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many manshifts were worked by persons on British Coal Corporation colliery books in 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A total of 26,407 deep-mined revenue manshifts were worked during 1986-87.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the precise nature of the programme of further work that the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate has requested the Central Electricity Generating Board to carry out at the Bradwell nuclear power station; how long this programme of work will take; which other magnox stations are having long-term safety reviews; and when they will be complete.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Nuclear Installations Inspectorate's requirements including time scales for further work are set out in its report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Completion is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board.

The Nuclear Installations Inspectorate has asked for long-term safety reviews to be carried out for each magnox station and will be pressing the licensees concerned to keep to agreed timetables.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Energy why the International Atomic Energy Agency has not been asked to inspect the British magnox reactors; whether any of the Central Electricity Generating Board staff who produced the long-term safety review of Bradwell nuclear power station ever worked at Bradwell; and whether any staff from the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate visited Bradwell in the course of assessing the Central Electricity Generating Board's long-term safety review.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, in the light of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate's report on the Bradwell power station, the International Atomic Energy Agency will now be invited to survey an older magnox station in fulfilment of the United Kingdom's obligations to co-operate internationally on such matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am considering how the United Kingdom might participate in the agency's programme of reviews of operational safety. The deployment of staff by the Central Electricity Generating Board and the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate is a matter for those organisations, but naturally Nuclear Institutions Inspectorate review team staff visited Bradwell.

Mr. Mullin asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has regarding disquiet expressed by the management of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority Dounreay nuclear establishment over the mislabelling of consignments of fast reactor fuel pins by British Nuclear Fuels plc staff at Sellafield and sent to Dounreay for reprocessing.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No consignments of fuel pins have been sent from Sellafield to Dounreay for reprocessing. The hon. Member may have in mind shipments of residues containing plutonium from Sellafield to Dounreay and I refer him to the answer given in the other place by Lord Gray of Contin in response to a question from Lord Brockway on 17 June 1986, at column 727.

Mr. Mullin asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list each occasion since April on which a Minister in his Department has made a statement encouraging members of the public to visit British Nuclear Fuels plc's Sellafield nuclear complex.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My colleagues and I are always happy to encourage the public to visit the Sellafield site and exhibition centre, as my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) did in the Second Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, etc., on 5 May 1987, at column 6.

Mr. Mullin asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish all evidence or papers submitted by his Department to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Morley asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the Central Electricity Generating Board has published all relevant information about construction difficulties at the Heysham 2 nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: General information about the progress of construction at the station is a matter for the CEGB.

Allegations about standards of workmanship and working practices at Heysham 2 made by former construction workers at the site have been thoroughly investigated by the independent Nuclear Installations Inspectorate. The NII confirms that none of the allegations provides a cause for concern about the safety of Heysham 2. The NII's report will be published in due course.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will publish a weekly input/output from 1 January of spent magnox fuel arising from civil magnox reactors, together with the arisings of resulting depleted uranium and plutonium stocks for the throughput at the Windscale B205 reprocessing plant at British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield;

(2) why he will not publish input/output details of spent magnox reactor fuel and depleted uranium/plutonium stocks at Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Mullin asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest information he has on the final estimated cost for the Sizewell B pressurised water reactor.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the right hon. Member for Salford, East (Mr. Orme) on 27 April at column 16.

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about progress by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. in carrying out safety improvements at Sellafield stipulated in the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate's audit reports.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: I have not yet received the progress report.

Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much has been spent by his Department on official hospitality in each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department spent the following amounts on official hospitality in the last two financial years:

1986-87	45·4

Research and Development

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace), of 13 July, Official Report, column 341, if he will (a) list all the research and development projects mentioned in his answer and (b) give details of those projects specifically carried out in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Details of the United Kingdom's participation in the European fast reactor R and D collaboration are a matter for the UKAEA. I shall ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Oil and Gas Technology

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the current amount of the budget available to the Offshore Supplies Office for the promotion abroad of British expertise in oil and gas technology; in which countries these promotions are made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: During 1987-88, the Offshore Supplies Office budget for overseas promotion of the British offshore supplies industry is £443,000. This is more than 80 per cent. of OSO's total promotional budget. The office will take part in major industry events in Angola, Canada, China, Norway, the USA, and the USSR.

I intend to play the fullest role in supporting the export drive of British offshore supply companies through my overseas visits and through my meetings with all sectors of the oil and gas industry.

British Coal (Management Consultancy Contracts)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about management consultancy contracts awarded by British Coal in each of the last three years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department has made provision for an estimated expenditure of £270,000 on management and computer consultancies in the current financial year.

Electricity and Telephone Cables

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many schemes have been implemented to replace overhead electricity and telephone cables with underground cables in conservation areas and areas of outstanding natural beauty.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This information is not readily available in respect of electricity cables and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Telephone cables are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Magnox Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a full input/output table of spent nuclear fuel and uranium and plutonium arising from the operation of the B205 magnox reprocessing plant since 1 January 1987.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given today to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas).

Spent Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a table of the annual amount of spent nuclear fuel dispatches, by date and amount, for each year since 1979, including the first half of 1987 for the Trawsfynydd magnox nuclear station; and which local emergency planning authorities in Wales are given prior notice of spent fuel consignments transported through their area of responsibility from both the Trawsfynydd and Wylfa nuclear plants.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1987, c. 288-89]: The quantity of spent fuel dispatched is as follows:

Financial year	Tonnes
1979-80	76
1980-81	64
1981-82	132
1982-83	118
1983-84	144
1984-85	118

Local emergency planning authorities are not specifically notified of movements of spent nuclear fuels through their areas as national procedures exist to respond to any transport radiological emergencies which might arise. Details of these procedures have been circulated by the Home Office to all chief constables, chief fire officers and chief executives of local authorities.

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on returning nuclear waste arising in low, intermediate and high level categories from the reprocessing of (a) imported thermal oxide fuel and (b) imported magnox fuel to each country of origin; what are the volumes involved in each waste category for contracts for spent nuclear fuel imported for reprocessing so far signed; and if he will make a statement on the impact on Nirex of managing spent nuclear fuel imported for reprocessing from other countries.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 2 May 1987 at columns 502-3.

I am asking the chairman of BNFL to write to the hon. Member with the detailed figures requested.

ESCOM (South Africa)

Mr. Boateng asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether there has been any withdrawal of uranium of South African or Namibian origin from international safeguards for national security reasons (a) before May 1979 and (b) since May 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 17 July 1987, c. 647-48]: I am not able to answer for previous Administrations. There have been withdrawals of uranium from safeguards since 1979. It is possible that some of this material was of South African origin.

Offshore Technology Board

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will list the members of the Offshore Technology Board, giving their occupations and working backgrounds, their remuneration, and an estimate of how many hours a year each spends, by name, on the board's behalf.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: The current membership of the Offshore Energy Technology Board is:

Interviews (Tape Recording)

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, following his meeting with the Association of Chief Police Officers on 18 May, he will now publish a circular on the subject of the tape recording of interviews.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Consultations about the circular are continuing. We shall issue a circular when consultations are complete.

St. Luke with St. James, St. Helier

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete the procedures necessary for the appointment of a new incumbent for the parishes of St. Luke with St. James, St. Helier.

Mr. Hurd: It is not the normal practice to answer questions about appointments to livings in Jersey within the gift of Her Majesty the Queen.

Police Assault Incident (Holloway)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate the numbers of police officers, by rank and department, who were assigned to investigate the assault in August 1983 of five youngsters in George's road, Holloway, at each stage of the three investigations into the incident; and what were the dates on which their reports were submitted and to whom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The first investigation was conducted by a detective chief inspector who reported on 16 March 1984. The second was conducted by a detective chief inspector who reported on 24 August 1984. The third was conducted by a detective chief superintendent who reported on 12 February and 23 April 1985. Each of these officers was attached to the Metropolitan police complaints investigation bureau and was assisted by a detective sergeant throughout his investigation and by other officers from time to time as the need arose. Their reports were submitted to the commander of the complaints investigation bureau. In February 1986, the Commisioner of Police of the Metropolis instituted a further review of the case. This was led by a deputy assistant commissioner who was assisted by a team of officers and civilian staff. The size of this team varied in accordance with particular requirements, but at one time included over 20 individuals.

Firearms

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many shotguns were reported stolen in each of the past five years; how many have been recovered; and how many were later found to have been used to commit a criminal offence.

Mr. John Patten: The available information relates to the number of notifiable offences of burglary and theft recorded by the police in which shotguns were reported to have been the principal weapon stolen; more than one firearm may have been stolen in each offence. The figures for 1975 to 1985 are published in table 3.11 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1985" (Cm. 10), and in 1986 there were 804 such offences. Chief officers of police do not record the numbers of stolen firearms recovered or of those subsequently found to have been used in crime.

Parole

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will either (a) use his powers of executive release or (b) take new powers so that an exemption can be made for those convicted of crimes of violence from any order he may make resulting in the premature release of prisoners.

Mr. Hurd: I have no present plans to exercise the power of executive release. My decision to provide for increased remission for good conduct and industry in the case of prisoners serving 12 months or less will not benefit those who have committed crimes of violence serious enough to merit a sentence of more than 12 months. I shall consider my hon. and learned Friend's proposal that we should amend the Prison Act to enable different periods of remission for good conduct and industry according to offence, a matter which could be referred to the parole review.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes have been made in the presentation of homicide and manslaughter statistics by his Department since 1957.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost of apprehending, remanding and trying a person believed guilty of a criminal act; and what is the annual cost of keeping such a person in prison.

Mr. John Patten: The available estimated costs per person are Crown Prosecution Service £100 in 1987-88; Crown court trials £860 in 1986-87; legal aid for Crown court cases £327 and for magistrates' courts cases £213 in 1986-87. Where employed in 1986-87, duty solicitors cost £29, 24-hour duty solicitors £84 and "green form" assistance £39 per defendant. Costs of imprisonment in 1985-86 were £12,792 per prisoner per year in all establishments and £11,700 per prisoner per year in remand centres and local prisons. I regret that costs per person to the police and costs per defendant in magistrates' courts are not available.

Isle of Wight

Mr. Barry Field asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Parliamentary Boundary Commission to report on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Parliamentary Boundary Commission is due to report on all the constituencies in England, including the Isle of Wight, between 1993 and 1998.

Magistrates' Courts (Adjournments)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the annual number of adjournments of cases for sentence in magistrates' courts in England and Wales solely because of the absence of a driver's licence printout from the Swansea driver and vehicle licensing centre; what plans he has to improve the service to the courts and to reduce costs; and what is the estimated cost of such adjournments.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost. I understand that inquiries made of DVLC are ordinarily dealt with promptly, but if my hon. Friend has any particular difficulty in mind I should be very ready to arrange for it to be considered further.

Mr. Antonas Gecas

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate further allegations against Antonas Gecas contained in the new Scottish television film about him and other suspected war criminals living in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will initiate investigations into new information provided to him concerning alleged war criminals living in the United Kingdom;

(3) whether he will now take action concerning the further allegations against Antonas Gecas and other suspected war criminals living in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd: The allegations made in the Scottish Television programme are being studied together with the material supplied to us on 17 July by the Simon Wiesenthal Centre.

Criminal Proceedings

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning criminal proceedings pursued by the police against a violent party, if the victim is reluctant to pursue the matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We cannot trace the receipt of any such representations. The investigation of offences and decisions on whether to initiate a prosecution are operational matters for chief officers of police.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of the Metropolitan police on breathalysing officers involved in accidents when driving police vehicles.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that police officers who are involved in vehicle accidents, whether on or off duty, are required to undergo a breath test whenever there is reason to believe that they have consumed alcohol prior to the accident.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Metropolitan police officers were breathalysed while on duty in 1986; and in how many cases the test was positive.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that details of the number of breath tests administered to police officers and the results are not recorded separately. However, in 1982 two Metropolitan police officers were convicted for drink-drive offences committed while on duty.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any Metropolitan police officers were (a) dismissed or (b) disciplined for drinking while on duty in 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In disciplinary proceedings completed in 1986, two officers were found guilty of the police discipline code offence of drinking on duty. One who was at the same time found guilty of criminal conduct, in that he had been convicted by a court of a drink-driving offence, was required to resign from the force as an alternative to dismissal. The other was awarded a lesser penalty.

Police Vehicles (Accident Statistics)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) police officers and (b) members of the public were killed in accidents involving police vehicles in 1986 for England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not currently available centrally. However, arrangements have been made for police forces to collect information on accidents involving police vehicles which cause death or serious injury from 1 January this year. The information will be collected centrally through annual returns from forces beginning early in 1988.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Ground asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cases were awaiting resolution by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the end of each month since October 1986;

(2) how many cases were resolved by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board during each month since October 1986;

(3) how many staff were employed by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the end of each month since October 1986.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the table.

Month	Cases awaiting resolution at the end of each month	Cases resolved during each month	Staff in post (part-time staff being each counted as one half)
October 1986	60,600	2,815	211·5
November 1986	59,800	3,882	208·5
December 1986	61,400	2,030	214·5
January 1987	62,100	2,365	212·5
February 1987	63,100	2,432	212·5
March 1987	64,200	2,854	214·5
April 1987	66,000	1,949	215·5
May 1987	67,300	1,713	217·5
June 1987	68,600	2,023	218·5

Licensing Hours

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the effect of liberalising public house opening hours in England and Wales will have on the price of alcohol sold in those establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am not aware of any evidence to suggest that the introduction of flexible licensing hours will have a direct effect on the price of alcoholic drinks.

Crime Prevention Roadshow

Mr. Fearn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what towns and cities the crime prevention roadshow will visit when it tours the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that visits to Merseyside, London, Cardiff and Coventry have been confirmed; a suitable place is still being sought in the north-east. The crime prevention roadshow is being organised by the local authority associations and the Association of Chief Police Officers, with the full support of the Government.

Detention Centre, Usk

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total capacity of the senior detention centre at Usk in Glamorgan; how many persons are currently imprisoned there; what is the capacity of the youth custody centre; and how many are currently held there.

Mr. John Patten: The certified normal accommodation (CNA) of the senior detention centre at Usk is 120. On 22 July 1987, 71 young offenders were detained there. The CNA of the youth custody centre at Usk is 120. On 22 July 1987, 104 young offenders were detained there.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been spent by his Department on official hospitality in each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Hurd: The information requested is as follows:

1985-86	29,618

A further two people (both Turkish) came forward voluntarily after the operation. One was found to be an illegal entrant and one an overstayer who was not arrested.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications from (a) husbands, (b) fiances, (c) wives and (d) fiancees have been (i) decided, (ii) granted and (iii) refused at each post in the Indian sub-continent for each quarter since January 1986; and how many such applications in each category and for each quarter were refused (1) wholly and (2) partly because of the primary purpose rule; what was the refusal rate in each instance; and what percentage of those refusals was (x) wholly and (y) partly on primary purpose grounds.

Mr. Renton: Information for the whole of the Indian sub-continent on husbands and fiance(e)s granted or refused entry clearance to the United Kingdom is given in table 9 of the quarterly Home Office statistical bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics — First Quarter 1987" (issue 14/87). Corresponding information on wives in 1986 is given in table 8 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom, 1986" (Cm.166). Information for the whole of the sub-continent on persons refused on primary purpose grounds is given in the following table. With regard to the other information requested, I will write to the hon. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were waiting for special quota vouchers in (a) June 1987 and (b) December 1986; when those issued with vouchers on those dates had applied; when those now applying can expect to receive vouchers; and how many applicants there were for vouchers in 1986 and the first half of 1987.

Naturalisation

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of applications for naturalisation were refused in 1986 and on what grounds.

Mr. Renton: Some 8·4 per cent. of naturalisation applications completed in 1986 were refused on the grounds that the Secretary of State was not satisfied that the applicant had met the statutory requirements and should be naturalised.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British citizenship under section 4(5) of the British Nationality Act 1981 have been (a) made, (b) granted and (c) refused; and how many of those granted have been on the grounds of service in the armed forces.

Mr. Renton: The position on 22 July was as follows: 529 applications under section 4(5) of the British Nationality Act 1981 have been received; 39 have been granted, of which 33 were from applicants who had served in the armed forces under the Government of Hong Kong in the second world war; and 481 have been refused.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his best estimate as to how many applications for (a) adult registration with entitlement, (b) naturalisation and (c) registration of minors his Department expects to (i) receive and (ii) grant in 1987-88.

Mr. Renton: Our budget estimate is that in 1987-88 we will receive 64,000 applications for registration from both adults and minors and 26,000 naturalisation applications; we estimate that we should issue some 40,000 certificates of registration and 20,500 certificates of naturalisation.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for (a) adult registration with entitlement, (b) naturalisation and (c) registration of minors were (i) made and (ii) granted in each month from April 1985 to the nearest available date; and how many of the applications made (i) made and (ii) granted in (a) above were on the basis of (1) marriage to a British man and (2) on the basis of residence since before 1973.

Mr. Renton: The following is the information available for applications for British citizenship made under the British Nationality Act 1981 received in case-working groups in the nationality division and granted for each month from April 1985 to June 1987.

Notes:
(1) The figures for 1986 and 1987 are provisional.
(2) The figures for applications received for adult registration include both entitlement and non-entitlement applications.
(3) The figures for the registration of other adults relate to registration entitlements only in 1986 and 1987; those for 1985 include also some discretionary resumptions of citizenship following renunciation.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his Department's best estimate of the time an applicant will have to wait if applying now for (a) registration and (b) naturalisation;

(2) what is the average length of time taken to process applications for (a) registration and (b) naturalisation.

Mr. Renton: The average time taken to complete applications granted in June 1987 was six months for registration and 17 months for naturalisation. It is not possible to give a reliable estimate of the average time likely to be taken to complete applications now being received.

Guildford Pub Bombings

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to make a statement about the review of the case of the Guildford pub bombings.

Mr. Hurd: As soon as I have completed my consideration of all the representations made to me about the convictions.

Visas

Mr. Robertson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has placed any restrictions on, or refused to renew, any visas relating to personnel working in the various offices of 4 Victoria street, London, S.W.1.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 8 July 1987, at column 145.

Metropolitan Police (Women)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis concerning the latest position of the Metropolitan police force's talks with the Equal Opportunities Commission regarding maternity leave; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis concerning the deployment of women police officers on front line duties; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis concerning the duties of women police officers in the Metropolitan police force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Miss C. Martinez

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the application for a visa for Miss C. Martinez, the sister-in-law of Mr. Rudiger Schaefer of Enterprise Industrial Park, Britannia way, Lichfield, to which correspondence of 16 May Mr. Schaefer and the immigration and nationality department of his Department in Croydon refers.

Mr. Renton: Inquiries are being made to ascertain whether Miss Martinez satisfies the provisions in the immigration rules for the grant of further leave to remain as a visitor. Mr. Schaefer will be informed of the decision as soon as possible and the immigration and nationality department will also write to him about the other matters raised in his letter of 16 May 1987.

Prisoners (Release)

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that none of the prisoners released as a result of the changes announced on 16 July, Official Report, columns 1292-4, should be those convicted of any offence listed in schedule 1 to the Criminal Justice Act 1982.

Mr. Hurd: As I told the House on 16 July, the Prison Act 1952, which governs the rules of remission, does not empower the Home Secretary to make a distinction on the basis of offences.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Hurd: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Dogs

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to provide for a local authority register of potentially dangerous breeds of dogs and to provide for licensing and adequate security provisions before such animals are allowed to be kept; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. We have no plans for legislation in this area. Under the Dogs Act 1871 it is open to anyone to initiate proceedings by complaining to the magistrates' court that a dog is dangerous, or to report the matter to the police who will decide whether to institute a prosecution in the light of the facts of the case. On being satisfied that a dog is dangerous and not kept under proper control, the court may make an order for it to be kept under proper control or destroyed.

Police, Fire and Civil Defence (Expenditure)

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what expenditure levels he has determined in respect of 1988-89 for the joint police and fire and civil defence authorities in the metropolitan areas and the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: For these authorities, which under the Local Government Act 1985 are, for three years, deemed to have been designated under section 2 of the Rates Act 1984, I have determined expenditure levels as follows:

	£ million
Police
Greater Manchester	94,052
Merseyside	66,916
South Yorkshire	40,691
West Midlands	92,254
West Yorkshire	72,479
Northumbria	49,926
Fire and Civil Defence
Greater Manchester	46,799
Merseyside	31,617
South Yorkshire	22,314
Tyne and Wear	22,649
West Yorkshire	36,489
West Midlands	42,696
London	166,775

The figures are net of receipts and pension contributions, and, for police and civil defence, of specific grant. For police the figures assume that police grant in 1988-89 will remain at 51 per cent.

Formal notice of their expenditure levels has today been sent to each of the authorities together with advice on the procedure for applying for redetermination of the expenditure levels.

Satellite Broadcasting

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what transmission standards will be required for the services to be provided by the holders of the Independent Broadcasting Authority contract for the provision of direct broadcasting by satellite services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I confirmed on 27 March 1986 that, subject to any new factors emerging, C-MAC should be the standard use for all United Kingdom DBS services. Further study by industry and the broadcasters has, however, shown that D-MAC would offer advantages over C-MAC and the IBA has requested that D-MAC should be adopted. I have therefore agreed that D-MAC, suitably adapted fo satellite transmission, should be used in place of C-MAC for United Kingdom DBS services. Steps are being taken to submit the specification for the satellite transmission version of D-MAC (which has already been published internationally as a standard for cable transmission) for definition by the appropriate international bodies. This is in line with the requirements of the EC Council directive on the adoption of common technical specifications of the MAC/packet family of standards for direct satellite television broadcasting.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consideration he gives, when determining applications for experiments upon animals, to the development of alternative protections for those employed in manufacturing where there is exposure to chemicals and other materials in bulk of possible harmful levels; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the latest available figures for experiments upon animals; what were the comparable figures for five and 10 years previously; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Data Protection

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his plans are in relation to registration fees under the Data Protection Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The Data Protection Act envisages that the work of the registrar should be financed out of the product of the registration fee. That fee, covering a three-year period registration, was set at £22 in 1985 on the basis of an estimated 300,000 registrations. Actual registrations have been much less than that, and accordingly a substantial increase in the fee is now required. I have therefore made new regulations increasing the fee to £40 from 11 November this year. A further increase will be needed in November 1988 but its size will depend on the number of registrations in the intervening period.

The Data Protection Registrar has prepared a new simplified form for registration by small data users which he plans to introduce in mid-September. I hope that any small users who have, for whatever reason, failed to register so far will take advantage for these simplified procedures and register before the fee increase takes effect in November.

Offensive Weapons

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to include mail order sales of offensive weapons with no legitimate purposes within the review of the legislation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In relation to the sale of offensive weapons which have no legitimate use it would be our intention to cover all outlets including mail order sales.

CIVIL SERVICE

ISBN Numbers

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Minister for the Civil Service why the report of the study group into geological surveying bears two ISBN numbers; and whether he will protect unique ISBN numbering on all official documents to avoid designatory confusion.

Mr. Luce: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess; therefore, I shall write to my Friend and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Disabled People

Mr. Hannam asked the Prime Minister what steps are taken to ensure that full account will be taken of the needs of disabled people in all legislation to be introduced by the Government.

The Prime Minister: Departments co-ordinate their work to ensure that the needs of disabled people are taken fully into account in bringing forward proposals for legislation. The Minister for the Disabled keeps a close watch on these matters.

Departmental Press Releases

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Prime Minister what is her policy towards the use of official departmental press releases to announce matters relating to Conservative party organisation; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Official departmental press releases are issued to announce matters concerning the business of the Department.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Prime Minister whether she will remind Ministers to ensure that their Private Office staff during the summer recess send a file copy in addition to the original of every letter from a Minister to an hon. Member.

The Prime Minister: I am aware of my hon. Friend's concern, and I have arranged for the appropriate guidance to be reissued.

Council of Europe

Sir Trevor Skeet asked the Prime Minister if she will announce the composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.

The Prime Minister: The parliamentary assembly of the Council of Europe will be meeting in Strasbourg from 1 to 8 October. The delegation from the United Kingdom this year will consist of 12 members of the Conservative party, five members of the Labour party and one member of the Liberal party. I have also appointed a number of substitute delegates.

Overseas Visits (Cost)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister what was the total cost of her recent visit to the United States of America and Jamaica; how many officials accompanied her; and how she travelled.

The Prime Minister: The estimated cost to my Office of the visit is £56,000. Three officials and four support staff from my Office accompanied me. We travelled on a Royal Air Force aircraft.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister what has been the total cost of travel by her and staff from No. 10 Downing street in the last financial year.

The Prime Minister: The total cost of my travel and that of my staff in 1986-87 was £752,338.

Office Staff

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister if she will give the total staff complement of No. 10 Downing street for each year since 1979.

EC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister what steps she took at the June meeting of European Economic Community Heads of Government to ensure that expenditure in excess of the Budget in the current year will not be validated in 1988 through an increase in national contributions made possible by changing the present contribution formula or in any other way.

The Prime Minister: As I told the House on 1 July, at columns 493-94, the European Council agreed to a solution to the 1987 budgetary problems along the lines we had advocated. This is within this year's 1·4 per cent. VAT ceiling. On future changes to the system of contributions to the Community budget, I made clear at the European Council that before that issue is addressed there must be agreement on effective and binding control over Community spending.

Research

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister how much money Her Majesty's Government have contributed directly or indirectly for collective research by the European Economic Community since 1979; what commitments they have made for future contributions; and what evidence she has of the cost-effectiveness of research (a) financed collectively by the European Economic Community and (b) financed by Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister: The European Community's R and D programme provides funds for work carried out in the Community's own research establishments; work done in the establishments of member states on the basis of shared costs; and concerted action involving member states' own programmes. Between 1979 and 1986 the United Kingdom's gross contribution to successive Community budgets averaged some 21·7 per cent; it is not possible to attribute the United Kingdom's net budgetary contribution to particular Community activities such as research. In assessing the cost-effectiveness of R and D sponsored by the Community the Government apply the same criteria as in the case of nationally sponsored programmes. British industry, universities and research institutions benefit considerably from R and D directly funded by the Community and carried out collaboratively.

Regional Expenditure

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister what assessment she has made of the cost-effectiveness of money spent by the European Economic Community in the United Kingdom regions and money spent by Her Majesty's Government for the same purpose; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: European Economic Community expenditure on behalf of the regions of the United Kingdom, through the European regional development fund, contributes essentially towards national public expenditure in the regions concerned. Evaluation of the effectiveness of this public expenditure, which is almost exclusively in the assisted areas, is the responsibility of several Departments. Published studies include an assessment of the effects of regional industrial policy (1960 to 1981), a study of the effects of regional financial assistance on firms' investment decisions and a study of industry's early reaction to the new regional development grants scheme introduced in November 1984.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether the Government are prepared to increase the United Kingdom contribution to the EEC budget to enable more money to be provided by the EEC institutions for the benefit of the regions in the United Kingdom; and whether she will publish in the Official Report any assessment she has made of the comparative advantage of (a) EEC controlled and (b) Her Majesty's Government's expenditure in regional development.

The Prime Minister: The future level of funding for regional development throughout the European Community needs to be decided as part of the general debate on the Community's future financing. European Community regional expenditure fully supports the Government's own regional objectives while enabling a higher level of United Kingdom spending to be sustained than would be possible without such receipts.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether she will publish in the Official Report the classes of goods subject to zero rating for value added tax purposes which (a) are and (b) are not covered by her undertaking not to agree to any proposal from the EEC for the imposition of value added tax in such cases, together with the Government's estimate of sales in the current year of each class of item and the corresponding rate of tax being proposed by the EEC Commission.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the replies I have already given which make perfectly clear the United Kingdom's position on the European Commission's proposals.

The estimated sales of items that are currently zero-rated in the United Kingdom and the rates of tax proposed by the Commission in each case are:

	Sales [1] £ billion	VAT rate band proposed by the Commission per cent.
Food	30·5	4-9
Young children's clothing and footwear	2·5	14-20
Fuel	13·0	4-9
Books, newspapers and magazines	3·5	4-9
Internal passenger transport	4·5	4-9
Construction	8·0	14-20

[1] To nearest 0·5 billion.

Sellafield

Mr. Mullin asked the Prime Minister to which Minister British Nuclear Fuels plc is responsible for plutonium stored at Sellafield.

The Prime Minister: Storage of civil plutonium at Sellafield on behalf of its customers is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Trade

Mr. Allen asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the deficit on manufacturing trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: The balance of trade in manufactures was in deficit by £2·1 billion in the first five months of 1987.

Torvinstyle Properties Ltd.

Mr. Bill Michie asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress of the report of his Department's inspectors concerning Torvinstyle Properties Ltd.

Mr. Maude: This matter is now being investigated by the police who will report the results of their inquiries to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Fireworks

Sir Barney Hayhoe asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) whether he will arrange discussions with firework manufacturers with the aim of agreeing voluntary limits on the noise level of fireworks available for public use;

(2) whether he intends to introduce legislation to control the noise level produced by fireworks.

Mr. Maude: Over the past 25 years the firework industry has voluntarily reduced the explosive content and hence the noise level of bangers by some 40 per cent. The numbers of bangers sold has been reduced by 50 per cent. since 1977. The industry has ceased supplying jumping jacks.

I believe that further restriction or legislative control of the noise level of fireworks would not be generally welcomed, but this and all other aspects of the safety of fireworks are kept under review and discussed periodically with manufacturers, importers and representatives of local authorities and consumer and safety organisations.

Retail Sales

Mr. Holland asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many firms represented the upper half of retail sales in the United Kingdom in 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Butcher: The largest 94 individual companies accounted for one-half of retail sales in Great Britain in 1985. No estimate is yet available for 1986.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1962 the export-import ratio of United Kingdom trade in manufactures with the European Economic Community countries and with the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries other than the European Economic Community.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the following table.

Mr. Amess asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the present level of telecommunications and computer technology imports and exports.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the percentage increase in the volume and value of United Kingdom exports of semi-manufactures and finished manufactures, less erratics, between 1973 and 1979 and between 1979 and 1986; how much of the increase was due in each case to the increase in exports to the United States of America; and what in each period was the increase in the real exchange rate, measured in terms of relative export prices, against the dollar and against all currencies.

Mr. Alan Clark: Export volume figures by country are not available. The available information is as follows:

Textiles

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing imports and exports in 1970, 1979 and 1986 by volume and value from the European Economic Community and from other countries of textiles in each three-digit sub-division of SITC division 65, excluding sub-division 651, together with the figures for, respectively, cotton, man-made fibres and wool yarns.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information for 1970 is not available within agreed cost limits. The requested information on United Kingdom trade in 1979 and 1986 is in the following tables:

United Kingdom trade in textile yarn, fabrics and made up articles: 1979 and 1986

EC Membership (Financial and Economic Consequences)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) whether he will bring up to date the figures on direct investment in tables 6 and 7 of the memorandum submitted by Her Majesty's Government to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on the "Financial and Economic Consequences of United Kingdom Membership of the European Communities" (Session 1984-85, HC 57-II, pages 22 to 23);

(2) whether he will bring up to date the figures on inward and outward direct investment given in tables 8 and 9 of the memorandum submitted by Her Majesty's Government to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on the "Financial and Economic Consequences of United Kingdom Membership of the European Communities" (Session 1984-85, HC 57-II pages 24-25).

Mr. Butcher: I shall write to the hon. Member and place copies of my letters in the House Library.

Rover Group (AR6 Project)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to when the final decisions on the future of the AR6 programme will be made and announced by Rover; and what information he has as to the details and timing of the programme.

Mr. Atkins: Rover Group's 1987 corporate plan, covering major investment in the small car sector, was approved in full by the Government in February. The detailed product plans, however are commercially sensitive and it is established practice for the Government not to reveal them.

British Caledonian Airways

Mr. Grylls asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has received from British Caledonian about alternative options for its future, with particular reference to a possible bid by a foreign airline.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None.

Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much has been spent on official hospitality by his Department in each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Butcher: Departmental expenditure on hospitality in the United Kingdom over the last two years was £153,000 in 1985-86, and £224,000 in 1986-87. Hospitality costs incurred overseas cannot readily be separated from other travel expenses.

Rolls-Royce (Share Flotation)

Mr. Heddle asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will investigate the case of Mr. J. R. Blake of 86 Meadow Way, Walton, Stone, Staffordshire, in respect of his application for 500 Rolls-Royce shares and the alleged lack of a satisfactory response from Barclays Bank plc, registration and new issues department.

Mr. Butcher: I have not been able to look into this case in the time available. However, I shall write to my hon. Friend, and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the annual average increase in manufacturing output between 1979 and 1986 compared with the decade to the end of 1973; and if he will provide comparable information available to him on figures for the United States, Japan, Sweden, Norway, Germany, France and Italy.

Mr. Butcher: The information is as follows:

Average annual increase in manufacturing output (Per cent.)

	1963-73	1979-86
United Kingdom	3·4	−0·6
United States of America	5·5	2·1
Japan	12·3	3·5
Sweden	5·1	1·4
Norway	4·9	1·3
West Germany	5·1	1·1
France	6·2	−0·6
Italy	5·6	0·7

Source: OECD Main Economic Indicators.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what he ascribes the fall in the United Kingdom share of manufacturing output in the industrial countries since 1973; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing to one place of decimals the share of each of the main industrial countries in 1973 and 1986.

Mr. Butcher: A country's share of world manufacturing output reflects a variety of influences. In the United Kingdom's case during the 1970s relevant factors included high inflation, overmanning, and low productivity. In the 1980s the performance of the United Kingdom's manufacturing industry relative to that of our main European competitiors has improved markedly, as evidence, for example, by the fact that the United Kingdom is now at the top of the productivity growth league for the major industrial countries. Figures for all industrial countries are not readily available and could only be produced at disproportionate cost.

Regional Aid

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list spending on regional selective assistance for each region, Scotland and Wales in 1986-87 and proposed spending in 1987-88.

Mr. Butcher: Provisional figures for payments of regional selective assistance (RSA) in 1986-87 are as follows:

Area	£ million
North East	18·5
North West	19·2
Yorkshire and Humberside	10·0
East Midlands	2·2
West Midlands	9·9
South West	5·2
Scotland	35·4
Wales	27·5
Great Britain Total	127·9

Estimates for future expenditure are not broken down by English region: the actual distribution will depend on the level of demand. The RSA provision for each country in 1987-88, as set out in the Supply Estimates, is as follows:

	£ million
England	89·3
Scotland	46·8
Wales	36·1
Great Britain Total	172·2

Notes:
(1) RSA has been interpreted as industrial and training grants.
(2) All figures are gross, before deducting recoveries and European Community receipts under the European regional development fund.

Post Office (Sorting Machinery)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, when he next meets the chairman of the Post Office, he will raise with him the adequacy of Post Office sorting machinery to sort mail with hand-written post codes.

Mr. Butcher: No. I see no reason to raise with the chairman what is a detailed operational matter for the Post Office Board.

Retail Grocery Sector

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those mergers or acquisitions within the retail grocery sector notified to his Department in the last five years which were not subsequently referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Maude: This information is not readily available. I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total number of referrals made to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in the last five years concerning mergers and acquisitions within the retail grocery sector, together with the Commission's recommendations.

Mr. Maude: In the last five years two merger proposals involving companies in the retail grocery sector have been referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission: the proposed acquisition of Linfood Holdings PLC by Fitch Lovell PLC (referred 2 November 1982) and the proposed acquisition of Booker McConnell PLC by the Dee Corporation PLC (referred 21 June 1984). In both cases the Monopolies and Mergers Commission concluded that the proposals would not operate against the public interest.

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will estimate the total number of independent retail grocery businesses that have closed down in (a) the last 10 years and (b) the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: Data available from the retailing inquiries conducted by the Business Statistics Office suggest that the number of single outlet grocery retailers fell by (a) about 25,000 businesses between 1976 and 1984 and (b) 6,000 businesses between 1982 and 1984.

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish information available to him on the percentage share of the retail grocery sector during each of the last 10 years, and for the latest date for which figures are available of (a) major multiples, (b) other multiples, (c) independent stores and (d) co-operatives.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Competition and Retailing (Report)

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) whether he intends to undertake further studies to update the findings of the Office of Fair Trading's competition and retailing report; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent representations have been received by his Department or the Office of Fair Trading concerning the matter of discriminatory discounting within the retail grocery sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The 1985 Office of Fair Trading report, "Competition and Retailing", found no material change in the factors which led the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to conclude, in 1981, that discriminatory discounting had not in general operated against the public interest. There are in our view no grounds at present for further studies. Since the start of this year, my Department and the Office of Fair Trading have received eight representations on the subject.

Retail Developments

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster under what circumstances regional assistance is given to retail developments in the immediate locality of assisted regions.

Mr. Butcher: None. Regional assistance is not given to projects which serve purely local markets, nor to projects outside assisted area boundaries.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Hanley asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what considerations he has given to providing funding for the re-training needs of Citizens Advice Bureaux caused by recent changes in legislation and by the programme outlined in the Queen's Speech; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I am aware of the need for workers in Citizens Advice Bureaux to keep themselves informed of changes in legislation which affect the public. The National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, which provides the resources for the training of bureaux workers and which is funded by grant-in-aid from my Department, takes the cost of such training into account when estimating its needs for Government funding.

European Space Agency

Mr. Knox asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will give a progress report on preparations for the European Space Agency ministerial meeting in November.

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in what form and by what date he anticipates announcing Her Majesty's Government's response to the British National Space Centre's proposals for future expenditure before the European Space Agency meeting of Ministers scheduled for 9 and 10 November.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Discussions are currently taking place between officials of the member states of the European Space Agency. The Government are reviewing their priorities for R & D expenditure. It is important that we make the most effective use for the benefit of United Kingdom industrial performance of the resources available from the taxpayer. The longer term benefits of expenditure on space research have to be balanced against alternative uses of funds in support of other areas of United Kingdom industry.

Having carefully considered the options on space, we have decided at present not to increase our expenditure above the current level. This is already running at over £100 million a year. Discussions and preparations will therefore proceed upon that basis. The private sector, if interested in the results from such research, should come forward with further resources.

Bucharest International Fair

Mr. Hunter asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assistance his Department is giving to British firms wishing to exhibit at the Bucharest international fair on 17 to 20 October.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department's Eastern European market branch is ready to offer whatever information and advice it can to those companies exhibiting at the Bucharest international fair, and in Bucharest, the commercial staff at the embassy stand ready to assist British companies in any way they can.

Mr. Hunter asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he or the Secretary of State has any plans to visit the Bucharest international fair on 17 to 20 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State have no plans to visit the Bucharest international fair in October.

I myself had to postpone a visit to Romania this April but hope to reinstate it next year.

BA/B-Cal Merger

Mr. Janman asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in considering the British Airways/British Caledonian merger, he will have regard to any alternative offers put forth by other British carriers for the separate purchase of British Caledonian's intra-European or domestic operations as a means of preserving competition.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In deciding whether to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission mergers qualifying for investigation under the Fair Trading Act 1973, my right hon. and noble Friend considers each case on its merits, having regard to the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading and taking all relevant factors into account. However, alternative proposals for the separate purchase of some of British Caledonian's operations are in the first instance matters of commercial negotiation.

Mr. Cran asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what would be the combined market share of British Airways and British Caledonian in respect of ground crew and maintenance services at Gatwick.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

I do not have the information requested. I suggest that my hon. Friend approaches the airlines direct.

British Shipbuilders

Mr. Barry Field asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received the annual report and accounts of British Shipbuilders for the current year.

Mr. Atkins: In accordance with section 17*(a)* and 18 (b) of the Aircraft and Shipbuilding Industries Act 1977, my right hon. Friend is today laying before each House copies of British Shipbuilders' annual report and accounts for 1986-87.

Postal Dispute (London)

Mr. Forth asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he will take to safeguard postal services in the light of the recent disruption of the mail service in central London and the threat of national industrial actions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is primarily for the Post Office Board to deal with industrial action by its employees. However, subject to certain derogations, the Post Office enjoys the exclusive privilege of providing a letter service in the United Kingdom. The Government consider that such a privilege must continually be justified, and powers are available to suspend the monopoly. The monopoly is long established and we would not lightly suspend the privilege. But Ministers have stated on a number of occasions that we would use those powers in the event of industrial action within the Post Office that resulted in a cessation or serious decline in the quality of service. I confirm that that remains our policy and I would suspend the monopoly in such circumstances but I do not believe that the problems in London's west central district have yet reached the stage of sufficient gravity to justify that step.

Aid and Trade Funding

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the projects which received funds under the aid and trade project in the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the estimated expenditure of the Department of Trade and Industry in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Butcher: The DTI expects to spend £3·3 million on management consultancy and £7·2 million on computer consultancy during 1987-88 as part of the Department's management programme. The figures exclude payments to consultants engaged in connection with the Department's support activities to industry.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Interest Rates

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the real interest rate, based on interest rates minus inflation, in each Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country at the latest available date.

Mr. Lilley: There is no unique measure of "real" interest rates. The monthly publication OECD main economic indicators gives certain short and long-term interest rates and various price indices for the OECD countries.

Self-employed Persons

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the figures on the number and total income of self-employed persons given in the memorandum on the financial and economic consequences of United Kingdom membership of the European Communities, as set out in evidence to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee (HC, 57-II, page 69, Session 1984-85).

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Public Expenditure

Mr. McFall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the public spending planning total for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Major: The Government's plans for public expenditure were published in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 56).

Civil Service Pension Scheme

Mr. Butler asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he proposes to issue guidelines to Government Departments on the extent to which special advisers should be informed of the opt-out alternatives from the principal Civil Service pension scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall therefore, write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Cash Accounting Scheme

Mr. Fallon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the commissioners of Customs and Excise will be making and laying before the House the detailed regulations to implement the cash accounting scheme proposed in his Budget statement on 17 March; whether they will differ from the draft placed in the Library in April; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The regulations for cash accounting could not be made until the European Community derogation, requested by the Government on 17 March, had been approved. As I told my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) on 20 July at column 74 the Council of Ministers has now agreed to our request for a derogation. The Commissioners of Customs and Excise will be making and laying the necessary regulations during the summer recess, thus ensuring that the cash accounting scheme will be available for use by small businesses from 1 October.

Following consultation with trade and professional bodies, a number of significant changes are being made to the draft regulations which were placed in the Library. These changes, all intended to be beneficial to small businesses wishing to use the cash accounting scheme, will of course be widely publicised when the regulations are laid.

Rating Repair

Sir Barney Hayhoe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make it his policy to assign part or the whole of the yield from income tax to the payment of local government expenditure under the proposed community charge and unified business rate system.

Mr. Lawson: No. Central Government already provide substantial support to local government expenditure from national taxation. But it is not the practice of the Government to hypothecate revenues from a particular tax to particular areas of expenditure.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Chancellor of Exchequer what assessment he has made of the implication for Inland Revenue valuation staff of the proposed community charge.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue valuation staff will not be involved in the administration of the community charge. Their existing responsibility for the valuation of domestic properties and maintenance of the corresponding valuation list will cease as domestic rates in England and Wales come to an end.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect on the retail prices index after one, two and three years of a reduction of 10 per cent. in the trade-weighted average nominal exchange rate, all other considerations remaining the same.

Mr. Lilley: The effects of a change in the exchange rate on the RPI will depend on a number of factors such as the reason for the change and the operation of policy.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect of the fall in the trade-weighted nominal exchange rate over the past 12 months on the retail prices index compared with the increase in the cost of housing; and if he will provide illustrative figures.

Mr. Lilley: The housing component of the RPI, which includes rents, rates and mortgage interest payments among other things, increased by about 10 per cent. in the 12 months to June 1987, accounting for about 1½ percentage points of the increase in the RPI over this period. For the effect of the exchange rate on the RPI, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today.

Unit Costs

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the percentage increase in unit labour costs for (a) manufacturing, (b) the production and extractive industries and (c) the rest of the economy in the latest 12 months for which figures are available, for each year since 1970, and for the decades ending in 1966 and 1973.

Mr. Major: Figures are available for manufacturing industries and for the production industries (which includes the extractive industries) only from 1971 to 1985. The 1986 figures will be published in due course in the Department of Employment Gazette. No figures are compiled for the rest of the economy.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report tables, with the same distribution and in the same format as his reply dated 25 July 1986, Official Report, columns 664-66, of information on taxable incomes and yield showing (a) the effect of the recent budgetary changes in a full year and (b) the replacement of all allowances and reliefs, including the wife's earnings election, by (i) an increase in the personal allowances to £2,500 and £5,000 for, respectively, single persons and married couples under age 65 and to £3,000 and £5,000 for those over 65, (ii) a reduced rate band of £1,000 for single persons and £2,000 for married couples at 15 per cent., followed by a standard-rate band of £7,250 for single persons and £9,500 for married couples at 25 per cent., followed by four higher-rate bands of £5,000 in 5 per cent. steps for single persons and three higher rate bands of £7,500, £7,000 and £7,000 in 5 per cent. steps for married couples, (iii) the introduction of a claw back (on the lines of the present age allowance) of the whole of the single allowance and £3,000 of the married allowance at a rate of £4 for every £10 of income in excess of £4,500 for single persons under 65, £5,000 for those over 65 and £9,000 for all married couples.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall, therefore, write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

EC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the information given in his written reply to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) of 4 February, Official Report, columns 669-70, concerning the principal components in the United Kingdom's payments and receipts from the European Economic Community together with a forecast for the current year.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested concerning the outturn for the 1986 calendar year and an estimate for 1987 is given in the table:

[1] Because of rounding, the column totals do not necessarily equal the sum of the individual items.

[2] The forecast for 1987 is taken from the Statement on the 1987 Community budget, Cm. 194 published on 23 July 1987.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) on 6 February, Official Report, column 840, setting out the financial guideline for the European Economic Community budget, whether he will publish in the Official Report, a table comparing the guideline for 1987 with what was originally proposed by the European Economic Community Commission and what has now been agreed on an adhoc basis; and if he will explain how the additional finance is to be raised.

Mr. Brooke: The financial guideline for the European Community Budget for 1987, remains at 22.961 million ecus, as was stated on 6 February 1987 at column 840. It was agreed at the European Council on 29-30 June and subsequently by the Agriculture Council on 13 July, that agricultural expenditure would be kept within the 1987 financial guideline by means of an adjustment in the system of advance payments to agricultural intervention agencies in the Member states.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he can now provide the information for 1987 which was omitted from his written reply to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) on 3 February, Official Report, column 578, concerning the United Kingdom's value added tax share of the allocated European Economic Community budget and the corresponding receipt.

Mr. Brooke: On the basis of the information contained in the 1988 preliminary draft budget, the figures for 1987 which correspond to those for 1986 given in my reply to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) on 3 February 1987 at column 578 are 6,961 mecu for our VAT share of the allocated budget and 3,524 mecu for our allocated receipts.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the information given in his written reply to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) on 3 February, Official Report column 578, concerning the amount by which the United Kingdom contribution to the European Economic Community budget exceeds receipts; and if he will add a forecast for 1987, including in that forecast any contribution which may have to be paid next year to cover a shortfall in revenue in the current year.

Mr. Brooke: The figures for 1986, together with an estimate for 1987, are as in the table. There are no proposals in the 1988 preliminary draft budget for dealing with any shortfall in revenue this year.

£ million

	Gross contri-butions less receipts other than rebates/ abatements	[1]abatements	unpaid abatement outstanding
1986	2,273	[2 3]1,294	—
1987[4]	[2]2,473	[2 3]1,565	—

[1] This column shows abatements against the year to which they relate, not the year in which they are paid.

[2] These figures have been calculated using an exchange rate of £1 = 1·45 ecu.

[3] This figure is the sterling equivalent of the 1,633 mecu abatement in respect of 1986 contained in the 1987 budget plus the 244 mecu correction to our abatement in respect of 1986 contained in the 1988 preliminary draft budget.

[4] These figures are taken from the Statement on the 1987 Community budget, Cm 194, published on 23 July. They do not take account of the supplementary and amending budget now approved by the Council of Ministers and the European Parliament.

[5] This figure is the sterling equivalent of the 2,269 mecu abatement in respect of 1987 contained in the 1988 preliminary draft budget.

Income Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of extending the separate assessment of wife's income election to investment income; and how many people he calculates could benefit from such an opportunity.

Mr. Norman Lamont: On the basis of the distribution of investment income between husbands and wives reported to the Inland Revenue, the full year cost at 1987-88 income levels of extending the wife's earnings election to investment income and category B national insurance pensions is about £120 million and about 170,000 couples would benefit. These estimates may understate the full effects because some investment income for which income tax liability at the basic rate is satisfied at source is not reported to the Inland Revenue and the estimates make no allowance for behavioural changes which might occur.

Inner-city Programmes

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will itemise all additional expenditure authorised on inner-city programmes for the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Major: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall, therefore, write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

National Debt

Mr. Ground asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the national debt, including foreign currency debt but excluding official holdings, outstanding at the end of March, as a percentage of gross domestic product, average measure, at current market prices centred on 31 March; and what is his estimate of the national debt so expressed for the end of March 1988.

Mr. Lilley: No estimate is as yet available of the national debt, including foreign currency debt but excluding official holdings, outstanding at the end of March 1987. Including official holdings and foreign currency debt, the national debt outstanding at the end of march 1987 was £185·8 billion, 47·3 per cent. of the average measure of gross domestic product in the first quarter of 1987 (at an annual rate at current market prices). No forecast is available for 1988.

Disposable Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the average annual percentage increase in real personal disposable income in 1974 to 1979 and from 1979 to the latest available period of 12 months.

Mr. Major: The average annual increase in real personal disposable income from 1974 to 1979 was 2·1 per cent. From 1979 to the year ending in the first quarter of 1987 the average annual increase was 1·9 per cent.

Investment Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the net inflow of overseas funds each year since 1979 and in 1987 to date for investment in (a) Government securities, (b) privatisation issues and (c) other securities.

Mr. Lilley: The available information relating to net investment by overseas residents in United Kingdom government and other securities since 1979 is given in the 1986 edition of the "United Kingdom Balance of Payments" (the CSO Pink Book) and in Economic Trends for June 1987, copies of which are in the Library. The relevant Pink Book tables are 8.2 (direct investment), 8.3 (portfolio investment) and 8.6 (short-term government securities). The corresponding Economic Trends tables are 9, 10 and 13.

The following information on the main recent privatisation issues relates to estimated initial subscriptions in overseas markets:

	£ million
1984	280
1985	190
1986	350
[1]1987	270

[1] First half.

Government Securities

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the amount of interest payable on Government securities in 1986 in money terms and as a percentage of gross domestic product to one place of decimals compared with 1957, 1967 and 1978.

Mr. Lilley: Following is the information:

Interest payable of British Government Securities

	£ billion	Per cent. of GDP
1957-58	0·5	2·4
1967-68	0·9	2·2
1978-79	4·9	2·9
1985-86	12·1	3·4

Note: Complete information is only available on a financial year basis.

Figures for 1986-87 will be published in the "Consolidated Fund and National Loans Fund Accounts" (to be published in December).

House Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his assessment of the part the increase in house prices has played in raising wage costs since 1975 and 1979, respectively; what provision the Government have made to compensate their employees for moving from the regions to London; and what is his estimate of the difference in annual housing costs for the average employee on Humberside and in London.

Mr. Brooke: There may be a relationship between house prices and average earnings but its exact nature and size are open to question.

The arrangements for assisting civil service staff on transfer to areas where housing is more expensive have recently been improved. Somebody who is permanently transferred to London and now has to spend at least an extra £30,000 to buy a similar house can now receive up to £2,460 per year at current mortgage interest rates. (Before 1 April 1987 the limit was £1,138 per year).

There are no official figures for differences in housing costs between the regions. However, information on relative housing expenditure between regions is available from the "Family Expenditure Survey" (Table 29). The latest information concerns average weekly expenditure in the years 1984 and 1985 and shows average gross weekly expenditure of £35·82 per week in Greater London and £24·85 per week in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Interest and Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what weight is attached by the Government to the level of unemployment in determining the level of interest rates and the exchange rate.

Mr. Lilley: We attach great importance to the creation of jobs. The objective of the Government's economic policy is to defeat inflation and maintain a vigorous, enterprising economy which will generate sustained growth and increased employment.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there are any proposals to alter the rate of value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no such plans.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the value of trade with the EEC in those manufactured goods and alcoholic beverages, respectively, in 1986 which are the subject of proposals for a harmonised rate of value added tax and revenue duties put forward by the EEC Commission; what is his estimate of the amount of tax which would be chargeable at the United Kingdom rate on imports and exports; and what arrangements would be made to recover input value added tax on imports to ensure that there was no loss of revenue to the Exchequer as a result of imbalance of trade.

Mr. Brooke: The full package of the Commission's proposals for tax approximation has not yet been submitted to the Council. Until it has been carefully studied it will not be possible to give the hon. Member a reply.

Self-employed Persons

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1983-84 onwards the number and total incomes, capital allowances and so on, of self-employed persons in agriculture and horticulture on the same basis as in the written reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 26 March 1985, Official Report, columns 156-58.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall, therefore, write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been spent by his Department on official hospitality in each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Brooke: The amount spent on official hospitality was £30,438 in 1985-86 and £36,942 in 1986-87.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Amos asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will initiate discussions with interested parties and organisations about the tax treatment of milk quotas under the Capital Gains Tax Act 1979; if he will take steps to extend the scale of the reliefs available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Imports and Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate of the effect on the volume of imports of finished manufactures of an increase of 10 per cent. in the real exchange rate, measured in terms of relative export prices, all other considerations remaining the same;

(2) what is his estimate of the effect on the volume of exports of finished manufactures of an increase of 10 per cent. in the real exchange rate, measured in terms of relative export prices, all other considerations remaining the same.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the documentation for the Treasury macroeconomic model which was published in January. The estimates it contains are uncertain, subject to a margin of error and are kept under review.

Credit

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Her Majesty's Government will introduce selective controls on credit by imposing differential reserve requirements on financial institutions designed to curb asset speculation, based on non-interest-bearing deposits with the Bank of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: No.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Yeo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been the rise in output in the first six months of 1987 compared with the equivalent period in 1986.

Mr. Lawson: The information requested is not yet available. Estimates of output for the first half of 1987, including a preliminary estimate for the second quarter, will be published by the CSO on 18 August.

Autumn Statement

Mr. Canavan asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about his autumn statement on the economy.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest balance of payments figures for manufactured goods.

Mr. Major: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. I shall, therefore, write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Priority Development Areas

Mr. Adley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to provide tax incentives for investment in places designated by Her Majesty's Government as priority development areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Oil Revenue

Mr. Wallace asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue was derived in 1986-87 from the production of oil from the Brent and Ninian fields.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that information on revenues arising from oil production in individual oil fields is not available as corporation tax is assessed on a company basis.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect the increase in the exchange rate since 1972 has had on the increase in incomes in the industries not producing internationally traded goods and services.

Mr. Lilley: The sterling exchange rate index has fallen rather than increased since 1972. It is not possible to estimate the effect of the exchange rate changes on incomes in industries producing non-traded goods and services since this depends on what would otherwise have happened and the operation of policy.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing information available to him on the degree of correlation between changes in the exchange rates and changes in consumer prices in the United Kingdom, the United States of America, Germany and Japan between turning points in the period 1957 and 1986.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to "International Financial Statistics Yearbook" (1986) published by the International Monetary Fund.

Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the percentage increase since 1979 in the gross domestic product deflator, the retail prices index, producer input and output prices excluding food, and the cost of fuel and imported raw materials.

Mr. Lilley: Figures for the gross domestic product deflator are published in Economic Trends. The retail prices index is published in the Department of Employment Gazette. The unit value index for imports of basic materials is published in the Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics. Indices of producer input and output prices for manufacturing excluding food are not compiled. However, long series of indices of producer input and output prices for manufacturing excluding food, drink and tobacco were published in British Business on 8 May 1987, where indices of the costs of fuel bought by manufacturing industry may also be found. Producer price indices are also available in the Monthly Digest of Statistics.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the average annual rate of growth in gross domestic product in the next five years, excluding the extraction of oil and gas; and what was the average rate reached in the decade to the end of 1973.

Mr. Major: Table 2.3 in the 1987 "Financial Statement and Budget Report" shows growth assumptions for real GDP excluding extraction of oil and gas. These figures are consistent with the FSBR forecast to mid-1988 and the MTFS path for money GDP to 1990-91. The average annual increase in the output-based measure of GDP excluding oil and gas extraction in the decade to the end of 1973 was 2·7 per cent.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the average annual percentage increase in gross domestic product between 1979 and 1986, excluding the extraction of oil and gas, and the annual average in the decade to the end of 1973; and if he will provide comparable information available to him of figures for the United States, Japan, Sweden, Norway, Germany, France and Italy.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to the information on the United Kingdom's gross domestic product obtainable from the Central Statistical Office's computer database (available from the House of Commons Library).

Comparable data excluding oil and gas extraction are not available for the other countries specified. Comparable data on total gross domestic product (including oil and gas extraction) are shown in the "Annual National Accounts, Volume One" (1987) published by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the breakdown of the total full year cost of tax relief for the personal equity plan scheme between (a) capital gains tax relief and (b) income tax relief.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cost of the tax reliefs for personal equity plans will depend on the number of plans, the amounts invested and the performance of those investments. The cost in 1987-88, which is wholly income tax relief, is expected to be about £25 million. Costs will build up in future years, and after January 1989 investments made in 1987 may be realised free of capital gains tax.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Brooke: The Treasury plans to spend approximately £2 million on management and computer consultancy in the financial year 1987-88.

EC Budget Council

Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent meeting of the European Community Budget Council.

Mr. Brooke: The Budget Council met in Brussels on 23 July. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council met a delegation from the European Parliament led by Lord Plumb, to hear the Parliament's views on the 1988 budget.

The Council then discussed the Commission's preliminary draft budget proposals for 1988. I made clear that any draft budget established must respect the own resources ceiling. The Council adjourned without reaching any decision on the 1988 budget, and agreed to resume its discussions in September.

Tax Appeals (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Raffan asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there are any plans to change the present arrangements for tax appeals in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A consultative document will shortly be published on the joint authority of my right hon. Friends, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Lord Chancellor, on the possibility of setting up general commissioners in Northern Ireland.

Most appeals against tax assessments are heard by the general commissioners but a taxpayer may elect in many cases to take his appeal to the special commissioners instead.

For historical reasons there are no general commissioners in Northern Ireland and all appeals are heard by the special commissioners (subject in most cases to a little used right of election to have the appeal heard by the county court). The consultative document will consider the possible setting up of general commissioners in Northern Ireland.

The document will invite representations which should be sent to the Inland Revenue by 20 November 1987. An Inland Revenue press release giving further details will be issued when the document is published.

Income Tax

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a distributional analysis of all income tax reductions since 1979 (a) taking the gains to the top 1 per cent., top 2 to 5 per cent., top 6 to 10 per cent., top 11 to 20 per cent., top 21 to 30 per cent., top 31 to 50 per cent., bottom 50 per cent., points in the income distribution, giving the number of tax units for each group, the reduction in income tax for each group compared with 1978-79, and the average per tax unit, and (b) taking the gains to those with total income under £5,000, £5,000 to £10,000, £10,000 to £15,000, £15,000 to £20,000. £20,000 to £30,000, £30,000 to £40,000, £40,000 to £50,000, over £50,000, giving the number of units paying tax and the reduction in income tax compared with 1978-79, giving both the amount for each income group and the average per tax unit.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 20 July 1987, c. 75]: The tables show the latest estimates of reductions in income tax liabilities at 1987-88 income levels of the 1987-88 income tax regime compared with an indexed 1978-79 regime. The comparison thus allows for budgetary changes in tax rates, thresholds and allowances but not for any change in the definition of the tax base. The 1978-79 allowances and thresholds have been indexed in line with the increase in the retail prices index between December 1977 and December 1986. As child tax allowances were being phased out in 1978-79 they have been excluded from the comparison.

North Sea Oil (Revenue)

Mr. Mullin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the North Sea oil revenue received by the Treasury for each year since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to the reply, 23 July 1987]: The latest figures for Government revenues from United Kingdom oil and gas production in each year from 1979-80 are as follows:

War Pensions (Taxation)

Mr. Corbett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost of disregarding for tax purposes war pensions received by (a) those under 65 years and (b) those over 65 years; and what estimate he has made of the numbers in each category.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: I regret that the information is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will provide figures comparable to those given to the right hon. Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore), Official Report, 17 July, of the weekly earnings after tax, national insurance and child benefit at (a) actual prices and (b) constant prices at April of (i) a single person, (ii) a married couple, (iii) a married couple with two children under 11 years of age and (iv) a married couple with four children, two under 11 years of age and one between 11 to 15 years of age and one over 16 years of age, whose gross earnings are not (1) lowest decile, (2) lowest quartile, (3) median, (4) upper quartile, and (5) highest decile for April 1979 under the June 1979 tax-benefit regime at April 1987.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: The information requested cannot be estimated until the results of the 1987 "New Earnings Survey", which provides the detailed earnings distribution, become available towards the end of the year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Namibia

Mr. Matthew Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he intends to take, along with the United Kingdom's European allies, to secure the independence of Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We remain fully committed to the United Nations Security Council resolution 435, the only internationally agreed basis for Namibian independence, and shall continue to support United Nations and United States efforts to achieve a negotiated solution.

Disarmament

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to initiate nuclear disarmament negotiations under the stipulated provisions of article VI of the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Mellor: Article VI of the non-proliferation treaty requires each of the parties to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to the cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament, and on a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control.

The fact that there are presently no nuclear arms control negotiations in which the United Kingdom participates does not imply lack of good faith on our part. As the House knows, we support the objectives of the current US/Soviet nuclear and space talks.

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation of the MBFR talks.

Mr. Mellor: We continue to take a full and active part in the negotiations in Vienna on mutual and balanced force reductions. Progress has been disappointing owing to the unwillingness of the Warsaw pact to provide adequate data on force levels or to respond to Western proposals on verification. We shall continue to press the Warsaw pact to respond positively to the Western proposal of December 1985 in which we made a constructive attempt to break the long-standing deadlock by offering to accept reductions in the United States and Soviet troops before agreement on force levels.

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what nuclear disarmament negotiations have been undertaken within the provisions of article VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty (a) since its inception and (b) since May 1979.

Mr. Mellor: The following nuclear arms control negotiations have been undertaken since the nuclear non-proliferation treaty entered into force in 1970:

(1) Since 1970, seabed arms control treaty; strategic arms limitation talks (I and II) including the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty; threshold test ban treaty; treaty on peaceful nuclear explosions; 1977-1980 trilateral (USA/United Kingdom/USSR) negotiations on a comprehensive test ban treaty.

(2) Since May 1979, 1981-83 Geneva intermediate nuclear force talks; 1982-83 Geneva START talks; 1985—present nuclear and space talks.

Torture

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom is to ratify the United Nations Convention Against Torture.

Mr. Eggar: As I told the House on 5 February 1986, we intend to ratify the convention as soon as possible but we need first to ensure that our current legislation and other arrangements accord with its provisions. For example, the convention would require us in certain circumstances to take jurisdiction over acts of torture committed abroad. Legislation is necessary to ensure that our courts have power to try such cases and to deal with other points arising from the convention before we can ratify it.

Death Penalty

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government will ratify the sixth protocol of the European human rights convention committing the United Kingdom to abolishing the death penalty for peacetime offences.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom abolished the death penalty for most offences in 1965. Since the question of capital punishment is debated by the House at not infrequent intervals, we have taken the view that it would not be appropriate to sign and ratify the sixth protocol on the basis of any one particular vote of the House on the issue.

Iranian Arms Procurement Office

Mr. Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he intends to take about the Iranian arms procurement office at 4 Victoria Street, London SW1, in the light of the vote of the United Nations Security Council calling for a ceasefire between Iran and Iraq.

Mr. Mellor: We do not believe any action concerning the Iranian military procurement offices in London is appropriate in the light of the recent Security Council resolution on Iran/Iraq. We are supporting the United Nations Secretary-General's attempts to ensure compliance with the resolution.

Colonel R. F. Crowther

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the withdrawal of Colonel R. F. Crowther as armed forces attaché of South Africa in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: Colonel R. F. Crowther relinquished his duties as the South African armed forces attaché on 17 July on completion of his tour of duty in London.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date Colonel R. F. Crowther took up the post of South Africa's armed forces attaché to the United Kingdom; and on what date he ceased to hold this post.

Mrs. Chalker: Colonel R. F. Crowther assumed his duties as the South African armed forces attaché on 18 June 1984; he relinquished them on 17 July 1987.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to refuse to grant credentials to any replacement for Colonel R. F. Crowther as the armed forces attaché of South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: As the House knows, we have already agreed with our European partners not to grant accreditation to military attachés from South Africa. In accordance with that policy, the South Africans were informed on 22 July that we would not grant accreditation to a proposed successor for Colonel Crowther.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date Colonel R. F. Crowther, the outgoing armed forces attaché in the United Kingdom for South Africa, left the United Kingdom; and when his Department became aware of his impending departure.

Mrs. Chalker: The South African embassy informed us on 3 July 1987 that Colonel Crowther would be relinquishing his duties in London on 17 July. He left the United Kingdom on that day.

Belau

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's response to the outcome of the eighth plebiscite of the Belauan people on the retention of their 1979 constitution; and what assessment he has made of the extent to which the two further referendums to be held in August relating to United States proposals for defence are consistent with the duties imposed on the United Kingdom and the United States by the creation of the United Nations Strategic Trust Territory which includes Belau (Petan).

Mr. Eggar: A plebiscite was held in Belau (Palau) on 30 June 1987 on the terms of a compact of free association between Belau (Palau) and the United States. It was monitored by a United Nations observer mission chaired by the United Kingdom. We are awaiting the mission's report. The referenda which the Belau (Palau) Government propose to hold in August concern an amendment to the Belauan (Palauan) constitution, and the terms of the compact of free association. Under article 83 of the United Nations charter responsibility for exercising the functions of the United Nations relating to strategic trust territories belongs to the Security Council, with the assistance of the Trusteeship Council.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if the United Nations department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has held any discussions with the United States State Department as to the conduct of the referendum of 6 December in the United Nations Trust Territory of Belau;

(2) whether Her Majesty's Government will be sending official observers to monitor the conduct of the referendum on 6 December in the United Nations Trust Territory of Belau;

(3) whether the United Kingdom representative on the Trusteeship Council will be taking part in the observer delegation sent by the Trusteeship Council to monitor the conduct of the December 6 referendum in the United Nations Trust Territory of Belau;

(4) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the referendum taking place in the United Nations Trust Territory of Belau on 6 December.

Mr. Eggar: We are not aware that any referendum is to be held in Belau (Palau) on 6 December 1987.

Embassies and Consular Offices

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the cost involved in maintaining embassies and consular offices for each of the past five years.

Mr. Eggar: The cost to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of maintaining its 207 posts overseas (including high commissions and missions to international organisations and conferences as well as embassies and consular posts) for each of the past five years is as follows:

	£ million
1983-84	188·5
1984-85	215·6
1985-86	216·2
1986-87	250·5
1987-88	271·0

Analysis of expenditure for 1986-87 is still proceeding. The figure for 1987-88 is an estimate.

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on measures taken to improve embassy security in countries with volatile political systems.

Mr. Eggar: The threat to security at all our missions overseas is under constant review. Additional measures are implemented as necessary to protect individuals, classified information, offices and residences. For security reasons, it is not our practice to reveal specific details about measures taken in particular posts.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Eggar: The estimated expenditure for the current financial year on management and computer consultancy is as follows. The figures include expenditure for both the diplomatic and aid wings of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Management Consultancy	255,000
Computer Consultancy	1,020,000

Helsinki Final Act

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on progress with the implementation by the Union of Soviet Republics and Eastern European countries of the provisions of the Helsinki final act during the last six months.

Mr. Mellor: During the last six months to 30 June 1987, Soviet and East European implementation of their Helsinki commitments took on special significance in the light of the third CSCE follow-up meeting currently under way in Vienna and the restructuring taking place in the Soviet Union. Overall, compliance with CSCE commitments continued to be unsatisfactory, in particular as regards breaches of the provisions relating to human rights and fundamental freedoms, although the record also continued to vary from country to country.

SECURITY IN EUROPE: PRINCIPLES GUIDING RELATIONS BETWEEN PARTICIPATING STATES; CONFIDENCE-BUILDING MEASURES AND CERTAIN ASPECTS OF SECURITY AND DISARMAMENT (BASKET I)

Violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms covered by principle VII, including freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief continued.

In the Soviet Union, however, the period was marked by a number of positive developments. A significant number of prisoners convicted under the most frequently used "political" articles of the Soviet penal code on anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda and anti-Soviet slander were released early under the terms of unpublished decrees. Permission to emigrate was also granted to some former political prisoners, for instance, Dr. Anatoly Koryagin, who had served half his 12-year sentence for his opposition to Soviet abuse of psychiatry; Sergei Khodorovich, who had served four years in a Labour camp after arranging charity for political prisoners and their families; and former members of the Moscow Helsinki group Tatyana Osipova and her husband Ivan Kovalev. By June the numbers of those released had risen to some 160, although at least 500 more prisoners of conscience were thought to be still serving sentences, including about 180 in mental hospitals.

Those whose sentences were curtailed were not, however, released through an amnesty (in contrast to some of the remaining prisoners of conscience who are expected to be among the beneficiaries of a formal amnesty announced in June in honour of the 70th anniversary of the October revolution). Most were compelled to sign undertakings and several who refused continued to serve their sentences. Well-known political prisoners not released included those sentenced to the harshest category of camps ("special regime") like the Estonian Mart Niklus; Viktoras Petkus and Balys Gajauskas of the Lithuanian Helsinki group; and Levko Lukyanenko and Mikhailo Horyn of the Ukrainian Helsinki group. Only a handful of political victims of psychiatric abuse have so far been released.

There was a welcome and steady increase in numbers of Jews allowed to emigrate. However, fears were expressed by many Jewish refuseniks that the new regulations on entering and leaving the Soviet Union which came into force at the beginning of the year would restrict applications to those with only the closest family members abroad—as stipulated. This would render most of those wishing to leave ineligible to apply. The Jewish community also continued to face difficulties in practising its religion and culture and confiscation of religious material from the homes of Soviet Jews, particularly of refuseniks, continued. Most of the best-known Jewish prisoners of conscience were released; however the Hebrew teacher Alexei Magarik remained imprisoned.

Arrests of Christian believers diminished in the period under review and a number of Baptists and other religious activists were among those released ahead of term. Humanitarian considerations, however, were not always manifest. One baptist who continues to serve his sentence, for example, is 65-year-old N. Boiko, who is now partly paralysed.

There was increased discussion of religious issues in the Soviet press. The Soviet weekly Literary Gazette revealed in May that the number of registered mosques (365) was far from adequate for the needs of Muslim believers: as a result more than 1,800 unofficial mosques were operating. It was suggested that at least some of these should be legalised. Other articles in the Soviet press took up the complaints of believers against the arbitrariness of local authorities, for example, in registering places of worship. Side by side with these developments, however, standard calls for a stepping-up of atheist indoctrination and press attacks on individual religious activists continued to be published. The tiny — if growing — Hare Krishna movement in the USSR continued to be a prime target for such attacks. Several of its members, including one of its founders Anatoly Pinyaev, remained in mental hospitals or imprisoned. His fellow adherent, V. Kustrya was sentenced in March to a further three years under the terms of a retrograde 1983 law.

Officials in some non-Russian areas (such as Byelorussia and Moldavia) have continued to criticise and resist attempts to promote local languages and cultures against Russian inroads.

Bulgarian implementation of CSCE commitments changed little over the last six months and the positive developments in the Soviet Union did not trigger any similar changes. Bulgarian interest in the CSCE still concentrated on security issues, whilst principle VII on respect for human rights and fundamental freedom was largely flouted. The practice of religion remained difficult for the non-orthodox denominations, with the Muslim faith particularly severely affected and many mosques remaining closed. Restrictions on attendance at Muslim services and festivals and prohibitions on certain Muslim practices continued. The general situation of the Turkish minority in Bulgaria remained profoundly unsatisfactory, with reports suggesting that the Bulgarian authorities had begun dispersing the Turkish population within Bulgaria by moving a number of families into predominantly Slav areas. Speaking Turkish continued to be forbidden as was listening to Turkish radio broadcast, with non-compliance resulting in heavy fines.

There was a slight improvement in Czechoslovakia's overall implementation of CSCE provisions, but with regression in some areas. Principle VII continued to be disregarded. The authorities continued to keep a wary eye on religious activists and to hinder the work of the churches. Sentences were pronounced in a number of important political trials during the period. In March, 5 members of the Jazz Section Committee, arrested in September 1986, were sentenced to varying terms of imprisonment (some suspended), supposedly for illegal trading and tax fraud. In May, brothers Pavel and Jiri Wonka were sentenced to 21 and 12 months imprisonment respectively for "incitement", relating to Pavel Wonka's attempt to stand as a parliamentary candidate. The Committee for the Defence of the Unjustly Prosecuted (VONS) continued to be the target of repressive action. The security services persisted in their efforts to prevent contacts between dissidents and Western officials. Despite this, in February my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton), then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, was able to hold meetings with certain Charter 77 signatories and members of the Jazz Section. Three Western journalists were admitted to the Jazz Section trial, and some Western diplomats to other human rights trials, representing a significant, if limited, improvement on past practice.

The GDR's implementation record during the last six months was mixed. The increase in the numbers of those below pensionable age allowed to visit the West seen in 1986 was by and large maintained. But the GDR authorities continued to refuse many applications to visit the West or to emigrate; and to create difficulties for citizens seeking information about human rights or Western contacts. Regrettably the GDR's policies have so far prevented the 750th anniversary of Berlin being an occasion for greater contacts between those living in both parts of the city. The GDR's basic policy of preventing the bulk of the population from travelling to the West and shooting at individuals who try to cross the Berlin wall and inner-German border was unchanged.

Hungary remained the most open of the Eastern European countries and its record of compliance with CSCE commitments was the best. Church-State relations remained harmonious. Freedom of expression was still restricted, with limited selective action against vocal critics. However, there was a move towards greater openness in the workings of the Government, with the appointment of a Government spokesman.

The improvement in Poland's human rights record initiated by the clemency law of July 1986 which led to the release of political prisoners in September 1986 was sustained. No further prison sentences for political offences were imposed. Instead the authorities dealt with political offences through the use of heavy fines and confiscation of property. However, trade union pluralism remained illegal and freedom of association seriously circumscribed. There was no change in the freedom allowed to Poles to practise religion, and meetings continued between Church and state within the established framework. In addition, the Pope visited Poland in June and made a number of firm statements in support of human rights. In spite of censorship, the level of real press debate remained relatively high.

Romania's poor record on implementation of the final act was unrelieved. There was no freedom to express dissenting views and the press continued to be heavily circumscribed. During Mr. Gorbachev's visit to Romania, seven Western journalists were refused admission to the country. Religious freedom continued to be restricted, with non-conforming groups and individuals liable to harassment and arrest. Cultural facilities for national minorities were not freely available. Travel remained difficult for all and contacts with foreigners were discouraged.

CONFIDENCE AND SECURITY-BUILDING MEASURES

Warsaw pact countries complied fairly strictly with the commitments entered into in September 1986 with the adoption of the Stockholm document. Certain countries even supplied more information than was required by the document. For one combined exercise with Czechoslovakia ("Druzhba '87") the Soviet Union provided notification even though its participation was below the relevant threshold. During the period under review the United Kingdom sent observers to four exercises: the Czechoslovak exercise Zima from 2 to 6 February; a Polish exercise from 9 to 14 March; and two joint GDR/Soviet exercises which took place in the GDR from 23 to 30 March and 10 to 16 April.

CO-OPERATION IN THE FIELD OF ECONOMICS, OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY AND OF THE ENVIRONMENT (BASKET II)

There were a number of interesting developments in the Soviet Union in this period, such as the proclaimed reorganisation of the Soviet foreign trade apparatus through the introduction of a small degree of decentralisation; the adoption of a law allowing joint ventures in the Soviet Union; and the publication of a draft law on the state enterprise allowing for a greater degree of self-financing and self-administration at the factory level. A new United Kingdom-Soviet chamber of commerce opened in Moscow in March. But in general there was virtually no improvement in the conditions for Western business men in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. Day-to-day annoyances, such as inadequate and expensive housing and the lack of sufficient telephone and telecommunications installations, persisted. There was no discernible improvement in the provision of economic and commercial data, and the lack of reliable statistical information continued to hinder business analyses. There was a growing awareness in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe of the importance of environmental issues. In the Soviet Union in particular this resulted in a number of concrete measures such as the abandonment of plans to reverse the flow of the Siberian rivers and the conversion or closure of polluting factories. However, much remains to be done.

CO-OPERATION IN HUMANITARIAN AND OTHER FIELDS (BASKET III)

During the last six months there was a considerable increase in travel between Eastern countries, as well as easier availability of visas for visits to relatives in the West in most cases — most notably in the GDR. The publication of new Soviet emigration regulations in January also clarified the position for Soviet citizens wanting to travel abroad, particularly in family reunification cases, although there was much criticism of the content from would-be emigrants. Arbitrary decisions continued to be made and difficult cases usually remained unresolved, including those where the Soviet authorities continued, dubiously, to allege state security as grounds for refusal. In Czechoslovakia, family visits in either direction remained unsatisfactory. Romania continued to discourage contacts with foreigners, with marriage applications inordinately delayed. Restrictions remained in force in nearly all Warsaw pact countries on individuals wishing to visit the West, as well as on access to Western diplomatic missions. In Bulgaria there was ample evidence that those who entered Western missions or had contact with Western diplomats suffered as a consequence.

Developments in Mr. Gorbachev's policy of "glasnost" led to increasing amounts of information coming from Moscow. There were more press conferences and improvements in the quality of press, radio and television reporting, including uncensored TV interviews with senior Western spokesmen (such as with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in March) and the publication of articles by Western statesmen and journalists, generally accompanied by critical Soviet commentaries. On the whole, however, the work of the media remained under close supervision and Western non-Communist publications continued to be virtually unobtainable. Jamming of the BBC Russian service and Voice of America ceased; but it continued in other cases, for example, BBC Polish service broadcasts on shortwave. In early June, East German police brutally beat up West German journalists who had been seeking to observe incidents in east Berlin in which the police had prevented crowds of young people from gathering near the Wall to listen to pop concerts taking place on the Western side.

CO-OPERATION AND EXCHANGES IN THE FIELD OF CULTURE AND EDUCATION

Many Eastern European countries expressed a renewed desire for closer cultural co-operation. Routine exchanges were generally satisfactory, impeded only by occasional bureaucratic constraints. There was much evidence of a loosening up of exchanges with Hungary outside the rigid quotas of the cultural exchanges programme and the period was marked by the signing in March by my right hon. and learned Friend during his visit to Budapest of an agreement on co-operation in the fields of education, culture, science and technology.

A United Kingdom/Soviet memorandum of understanding concerning new directions in co-operation in the fields of information, culture and education was also signed in March, during the visit of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the Soviet Union, reflecting the interest in both countries in increasing the volume and variety of cultural exchanges, and opening doors to increased cultural exchange outside the confines of the biennial agreement on relations in the scientific, educational and cultural fields. While primarily a facilitating document, this also contained a number of specific commitments to which the Soviet Union had not previously subscribed in documents of this kind. Although Soviet insistence on strict reciprocity was a continuing difficulty, the period as a whole saw the development of encouraging and positive trends in these areas.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Elderly Clergymen

Mr. William Powell asked the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what policy is adopted towards the payment of stipends to incumbent clergymen aged over 70 years.

Mr. Alison: The Commissioners' general recommendation is that their stipend should be set at such a level as to ensure that from all sources, including the state pension for a single person (whether the incumbent concerned is single or married), they receive an income not less than the recommended national minimum stipend. It is then for the diocese to determine the stipend level in each individual case in the light of this recommendation.

Mr. William Powell asked the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, how many incumbent clergymen are over 70 years old.

Mr. Alison: Ninety-eight at 30 June 1987.

THE ARTS

Paintings (Damage)

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Minister for the Arts if he will list the occasions in the last 10 years that paintings in the United Kingdom's major art galleries have been criminally damaged; what estimates exist of the repairs then made necessary; what were the names of the persons consequently convicted; and what penalties or treatment resulted.

Mr. Luce: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess; therefore, I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Minister for the Arts what is the estimated expenditure of the Office of Arts and Libraries in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Luce: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess; therefore, I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Expenditure

Mr. Amess asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on measures to encourage the arts in regions outside London.

Mr. Luce: I am concerned to ensure that excellence in the arts is accessible in all parts of the country. In the past three years, the Arts Council has instituted a number of regional developments in pursuance of its "Glory of the Garden" policies; the funding of the regional arts associations has been increased, untill they now receive over £19 million a year from the council (exclusive of Greater London Arts) and they have, in conjunction with local authorities, provided arts facilities in every region; the British Film Institute has facilitated the opening of media centres in Cardiff and Manchester; national museums have established branches outside London; and the Museum and Galleries Commission has taken steps to support touring exhibitions of works of art.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts (1) if he will list any expenditure by his Department on museums and galleries for each year since 1979 other than on the national museum and Museums and Galleries Commission;

(2) if he will list his Department's expenditure on the Museums and Galleries Commission and its predecessor in every year since 1979; and if he will show how much was allocated to each of the seven English area museum councils and, within the area museum council for the south-east to the London museum service;

(3) if he will list his Department's expenditure on (a) the operating costs, (b) the capital costs and (c) the purchase grants of each of the national museums for which he is responsible since 1979.

Mr. Luce: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess; therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

SCOTLAND

School Placements

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from parents complaining about school placements and seeking changes in the relevant legislation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 15 July 1987. I receive many representations about placing requests from parents, some of whom seek changes in legislation.

Rural Workshops

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the future of the development of rural workshops scheme administered by the Scottish Development Agency, with particular reference to the funds allocated and the number of applications which have been rejected due to inadequate funding;

(2) what representations he has received on the level of funding of the development of rural workshops scheme administered by the Scottish Development Agency;

(3) what policies his Department is pursuing to encourage the conversion or extension of buildings in rural areas to create workshops.

Mr. Rifkind: The development of rural area workshops scheme was launched by the Scottish Development Agency in November/December 1984 for a pilot period of two years with an annual budget of £300,000. The scheme, which was aimed at encouraging the provision of workshop accommodation in rural areas, proved so popular that on two subsequent occasions the budget was, with ministerial approval, increased so that over the pilot period a total of some £1·3 million has been allocated by the agency to the scheme. As agreed at the scheme's inception it, together with the agency's programme for rural initiatives and developments scheme, was the subject of a review at the end of the pilot period to determine how best future needs might be met. The consultants' report of the review of both schemes has been under consideration, and my officials and the agency are currently discussing possible successor arrangements. These discussions are still at an early stage and it would not be appropriate for me to comment on them. I understand from the agency that no applications have been rejected due to insufficient funding but that some are being held in abeyance pending a decision on future arrangements. I have received one representation on the level of funding for the scheme.

Maryhill Jobcentre

Mrs. Fyfe asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total of vacancies available at Maryhill jobcentre on 8 May.

Mr. Lang: Vacancy statistics for Maryhill jobcentre are included with those notified to Glasgow, West jobcentre: separate figures for Maryhill are not obtainable.

On 8 May 1987 the number of vacancies notified, and remaining unfilled, at Glasgow, West jobcentre totalled 741. On the same date a further 402 community programme vacancies had been notified to the jobcentre.

This information is available in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Fyfe asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the unemployment levels in Maryhill constituency for the current period and at the same time for each year since 1979, giving separate totals for males, females and school-leavers under 18 years.

Mr. Lang: Unemployment statistics for parliamentary constituencies did not become available until the introduction of electoral ward-based data in June 1983. The numbers of male and female unemployed claimants in the Glasgow, Maryhill constituency, and the equivalent figures for school-leavers under 18 years of age, in June each year from 1983 to 1987, are shown in the table:

	All Unemployed Claimants			Unemployed School Leavers under 18 (included in All Unemployed)
	Male	Female	Total	Male	Female	Total
1983	5,382	1,824	7,206	210	190	400
1984	5,359	1,906	7,265	201	169	370
1985	5,755	2,057	7,812	193	150	343
1986	5,882	2,087	7,969	214	188	402
1987	5,773	1,971	7,744	192	145	337

These figures are not comparable because of changes in the basis of the count.

The information is available in the Library.

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the seasonally adjusted unemployment figures for Scotland and the Dundee travel-to-work area for the last available date, and figures in May 1979, June 1983 and June 1987, compiled on a similar basis.

Mr. Lang: On a comparable basis, seasonally adjusted unemployment in Scotland was 333,600 in June 1987, 308,200 in June 1983 and 150,400 in May 1979. I regret that corresponding figures for the Dundee travel-to-work area cannot be provided since seasonally adjusted unemployment figures are not available below Scotland level.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for (a) each postal code district and (b) each local authority ward the numbers unemployed in June 1983 and June 1987.

Mr. Lang: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Fyfe asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has a target for achieving a greater representation of women at all levels of jobs held in his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department, like other Government Departments, has a policy of equal opportunities for men and women: I have not set any specific target for the representation of women.

A7 Trunk Route

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the cause and extent of any delay in the contract undertaken by the Scottish Development Department to demolish Nos. 3 and 4 Sandbed to make way for a new traffic roundabout in the A7 trunk route through Hawick; what penalties attach to the contractors responsible for any delay; and whether he can now give a completion date for the project.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The demolition of 3 and 4 Sandbed, Hawick, has been unavoidably delayed because of work associated with the resiting of public utilities. No penalties are involved and this work is now completed. The contractor responsible for the road works and demolition of the buildings will begin on site in August, with completion of the scheme due in November 1987. The demolition of the buildings will be carried out at the beginning of this contract.

School Transport

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report those local education authorities in Scotland which exercise their discretion under section 51(1) of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 and provide free school transport for school pupils who live within the statutory walking distance from school, together with the walking distance used to determine the right to a free lift in each case.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information taken from the annual survey of school transport undertaken in September 1986 is as follows:—

Authority and Criteria used

Fife and Lothian
More than 2 miles for all pupils.

Central
1 mile—under 8 years.
2 miles—8 years and over.

Strathclyde
More than 1 mile—primary.
More than 2 miles—secondary.

In addition each authority exercises its discretion by providing free transport within the statutory walking distance in special circumstances eg. safety or medical reasons.

Farm Grants

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has yet completed his inquiry into the simultaneous award of farm grants to enhance the agricultural value of the same farmland at Houpasley at Roberton for which forestry approval for tree planting has been given; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Investigations into this matter are not yet complete. My right hon. and learned Friend will write to the hon. Member as soon as he is in a position to do so.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent by the Scottish Development Agency in each year since 1979 (a) in the Dunfermline, East constituency and (b) in Fife in the following areas: (i) environmental improvement, (ii) industrial investment, (iii) advance factory building and (iv) total spending; and if he will express these figures as a percentage of spending by the Scottish Development Agency in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the loading of nuclear fuel at Torness power station and on contingency plans to deal with accidents at Torness, including the area of the emergency evacuation zone; and if he will list those responsible for protecting and informing the public.

Mr. Lang: Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate granted consent to the South of Scotland Electricity Board on Manday 20 July to allow fuel loading in the first reactor at Torness. I am advised by the Board that fuel loading has commenced.

The inspectorate has also approved the emergency arrangements, including arrangements for evacuation within 3 km of the site, in terms of the site licensing requirements. Action for the protection and notification of the public in the event of an accident is a matter for Lothian and Borders police, based upon advice from the board or the Government technical adviser if one is appointed.

Scottish Special Housing Association

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will undertake a review of the charges imposed by the Scottish Special Housing Association on owner-occupiers who purchase houses from the association, for the upkeep of amenity areas in the vicinity of houses; whether he will consider the possibility of assimulating these charges into general rate-borne expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: These charges arise from a condition included in the sale agreement under which former tenants of the Association have purchased their houses and the Scottish Development Department already keeps in touch with the Association on this matter. No review is therefore necessary. It is for district councils to decide whether they wish to assume responsibility for such amenity areas in the light of authorities' priorities and the resources available to them.

Prisoners

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the people presently in prison in Scotland have a last known address in a psychiatric hospital.

Mr. Rifkind: Information on prisoners' last known addresses is not held centrally and could not be obtained except at disproportionate expense.

A74

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the work on upgrading the A74 road will start; and when the work will be completed.

Mr. Rifkind: The timetable for implementing the upgrading of the A74 to motorway standard will depend on detailed studies still to be carried out, and on the time taken to complete any necessary statutory procedures.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost of upgrading the A74 road to motorway standard.

Mr. Rifkind: At present the cost is estimated to be about £200 million, but more precise estimates will be made in due course.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland to what extent the upgrading of the A74 road to motorway standard will involve a new line of route; and how much land will have to be purchased for this purpose.

Mr. Rifkind: Feasibility studies will shortly be commissioned to assess the best way of implementing this project. Until these have been carried out it is not possible to determine whether the best solution is upgrading on the existing road alignment or building on a new alignment. That choice will affect the land requirements.

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total cost of the A74 upgrading and the reason for that upgrading; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At present the cost is estimated to be about £200 million, but more precise estimates will be made once detailed studies have been carried out. The A74 is to be upgraded to motorway because it is the Government's policy to improve key roads and the A74 is Scotland's main link with the south.

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the design capacity of the upgraded A74; and what is the current traffic volume.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The design capacity of a rural two-lane motorway is 54,000 vehicles per day. The current daily traffic volume on the A74 in Scotland is some 19,000 vehicles. However the normal threshold figure for considering provision of a motorway is 28,000 vehicles per day in a design year 15 years after completion. Current projections for the A74 exceed this figure.

Street Lighting

Mr. Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will arrange for his Department to publicise the merits of better and more modern street lighting as a means of dealing with street crime; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The British Standards Institution is currently reviewing all road lighting standards. A working party of the Institution is preparing a code of practice concerned with lighting for urban centres and other public amenity areas. I understand that aspects of security and safety are being taken into account in drafting the code.

A1

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will initiate a comprehensive review of safety and other factors on the A1 road between Edinburgh and the English border, involving consultation with local communities and road users; and if he will publish a report on Her Majesty's Government's plans for the future development of that road.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The safety of the A1, and of all other Scottish trunk roads, is continuously under review. All potential accident black spots are automatically inspected and, when necessary, remedial work is carried out. As to future plans, consultants are currently examining roads south of Edinburgh with a view to recommending a route strategy. I shall make an announcement about their findings in due course.

Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At present I have no plans to meet the convention on this subject. My Department has been in touch with officials of the Convention about provisions proposed for implementation in the current financial year and further discussions will be held in due course.

National Health Service (Amendment) Act 1986

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to meet the Scottish Society for the Mentally Handicapped and other appropriate voluntary organisations to discuss the implementation of the National Health Service (Amendment) Act 1986 in respect of joint planning provisions.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have made clear our preference for a voluntary system of joint planning and my right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to introduce mandatory arrangements. We are, however closely monitoring progress on the preparation of joint plans and Health Boards are aware of the need to complete outstanding plans as quickly as possible.

Exercises (Gartcosh)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the nature of the police and public sector exercises in Gartcosh, Lanarkshire, in the week beginning Monday 13 July; what were the costs involved; what steps were taken to inform the public in advance; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A routine exercise to test contingency plans for emergency incidents was held by Strathclyde Police at Gartcosh over the period 7-11 July. Final costs are not yet to hand but I understand from the Chief Constable that the police budget for the exercise, which is unlikely to be exceeded, was £20,000. The costs of those Government Departments which were involved have not been separately assessed.

I further understand from the Chief Constable that prior notice of the exercise was given to householders in the immediate vicinity of the site but that one of the lessons learnt is that intimation could have been wider.

Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent by his Department on official hospitality in each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Rifkind: The amounts spent were as follows:

1985-86 £	1986-87 £
35,815	38,315

Banff and Buchan District Council

Mr. Salmond asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what grant penalty he intends to impose on Banff and Buchan district council; by how much its budgeted expenditure for 1987-88 is below the expenditure need assessment for the authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The grant penalty for Banff and Buchan is set out in the Rate Support Grant (Scotland) (No. 2) Order 1987 which the House approved on 20 July, and is £81,384, arising from a budgeted overspend against guideline of £81,000. The Council's budgeted expenditure for 1987-88 is £512,000 below its assessment of relative expenditure need, but 11·2 per cent. above its expenditure in 1986-87, a substantial growth in real terms. If the Council brings its expenditure down to guideline at outturn the penalty will be restored to it.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Scotland by what amount available electricity generated in Scotland exceeds normal demand.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave yesterday.

Abortions

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the numbers of National Health Service abortions performed in Scotland on women resident in each health board area in 1986 and the estimated numbers of women aged 15 to 44 years resident in each health board area in Scotland in mid-1986;

(2) if he will list the numbers of legal abortions performed in Great Britain on women resident in each health board area in Scotland in 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Following is the information:

Health Board	All abortions in Great Britain on women resident in Scotland[1]	NHS abortions in Scotland[1]	Estimated female population aged 15-44 at 30 June 1986
Argyll and Clyde	711	591	97,277

NHS Resources

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest percentage estimates of the increased demand for National Health Service resources in Scotland due to demographic change for the years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's expenditure plans for 1987-88 to 1989-90 allow an annual increase of 1 per cent. in provision made for hospital and community health services in Scotland to meet estimated demand growth caused by demographic changes and other factors. Health boards will also be expected to continue with their economy and efficiency programme which, in the current year, are expected to divert the equivalent of 1½ per cent. of revenue allocation into direct patient care.

Historic Buildings

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what funds he made available to the National Trust for Scotland for the upkeep of historic buildings for the years 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Maintenance Grants to the National Trust for Scotland were as follows:

1983-84	87,189
1984-85	101,585
1985-86	115,000

Babcocks

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information was available to him, prior to the announcement on the takeover of FKI Electrical Group of Babcocks; what guarantees were (a) sought and (b) given on the maintenance of Babcocks' Scottish plant; what information he has as to the number of employees at Babcocks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have received no prior information about the merger announcement. I understand that Babcock employs some 2,500 at Renfrew, Dumbarton and Paisley. The merger will be considered by the Director-General of Fair Trading, who will advise the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on whether to refer the case to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Rating Reform

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to lay the commencement order under the Abolition of Rates &c. (Scotland) Act 1987; what further orders subject to parliamentary procedure will be made in order to implement in full the Act over the next 12 months, and when; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I intend that the commencement order should come into operation before the end of August. Details of the main groups of regulations to be made under the Act in the next few months were given by my hon. Friend the Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Lang) in the course of a debate on the implementation of the Act which took place on Monday 13 July [Official Report, column 876-77].

Hospital Consultants

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to procure information on the number of consultants, whole-time and part-time, in each specialty in each hospital in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall consider whether to enhance the information available in "Scottish Health Statistics" in the context of developing computerised personnel and manpower systems for health boards.

Action on Smoking and Health

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what grant is currently paid by his Department to Action on Smoking and Health in the current year; what grant will be paid in the succeeding year; and when he last had a meeting with the organisation's officers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Committee of Action on Smoking and Health will receive an annual grant-in-aid from the Scottish Home and Health Department of £31,000 in the current financial year. The level of grant for 1988-89 has still to be decided. Officials of the Scottish Home and Health Department met representatives of the Scottish Committee of Action on Smoking and Health on 6 June 1986. A further meeting is due to take place later this year.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to transfer the funding of Action on Smoking and Health from public to private sources.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans at present.

Health Boards

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the National Health Service per capita expenditure for each of the health boards in Scotland, to include the charges retained by family practitioners.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information for 1985-86 is as follows:

Health Board	Per Capita (£)
Argyll and Clyde	303·06
Ayrshire and Arran	281·12
Borders	291·74
Dumfries and Galloway	334·94
Fife	275·35
Forth Valley	327·97
Grampian	326·01
Greater Glasgow	466·41
Highland	352·91
Lanarkshire	280·98
Lothian	380·41
Orkney	284·22
Shetland	279·05
Tayside	415·07
Western Isles	316·53
Scotland	353·86

Notes:

(1.) The expenditure figures used are taken from the annual accounts submitted to the Department by Health Boards. They are inclusive of charges paid by patients and retained by dental, pharmaceutical and ophthalmic practitioners. These charges amounted to £31·9 million, or £6·22 per capita, for Scotland as a whole.

(2.) Figures do not include expenditure on support services provided by the Common Services Agency on the main capital programme, or on the programme for the upgrading of the NHS estate.

(3.) The population figures used are mid-year estimates of resident population for 1985. The distribution of funds to Health Boards in Scotland is determined by population weighted according to age, sex and local mortality rates; by the amount of health care provided for patients from neighbouring areas (cross boundary flow), by teaching hospital costs, by a number of other commitments, and also by the extent to which individual Boards benefit by the operation of the resources equalisation process. It is therefore not possible to draw reliable conclusions from comparisons of per capita expenditure by Health Board based on resident population figures which make no allowance for these factors.

Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has revised the financial allocations to health boards for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since the House was informed of this year's allocations on 11 March an additional £35 million has been made available. This brings to £1,570 million the allocation to health boards to meet their gross recurrent expenditure commitments on hospitals and community health services in 1987-88. After expected income is taken into account, the net cash limited allocations to individual Health boards are as follows:

Health Boards	Recurrent Recurrent (net) £ million
Argyll and Clyde	112·583
Ayrshire and Arran	82·854
Borders	24·148
Dumfries and Galloway	40·380
Fife	77·651
Forth Valley	74·095
Grampian	142·411
Greater Glasgow	408·926
Highland	58·838
Lanarkshire	128·691
Lothian	251·390
Orkney	4·406
Shetland	5·190
Tayside	145·277
Western Isles	8·036
Total	[1]1564·876

[1] Includes £14·06 million allocated outwith the SHARE formula for specific commitments such as the national cardiac surgery service and for new developments in health care.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Malcolm Rifkind: Expenditure by my Department on external management and computer consultancies in 1987-88 is currently estimated at £286,700.

UK 2000

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what activity there has been by UK 2000 in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

School Meals

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what are the results of the annual census of school meals in Scotland held in January;

(2) if he will publish a table showing (a) the cost of fixed school meals in primary and secondary schools in each region, division, or island authority in Scotland in January and (b) the average amount spent on cafeteria meals;

(3) if he will publish a table showing (a) the total number of staff employed in the school meals service in January in each region, division or island authority in Scotland and (b) the number of staff employed for (i) 30 or more hours per week and (ii) less than 30 hours per week.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Coal Industry

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by region for each year since and including 1976 the opencast coal mining applications that have been considered by him on appeal, and the results of those appeals in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Education Costs

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest figure for expenditure per pupil on books and on equipment in (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) special schools; and what are the comparable figures for each of the years since 1978-79, in cash terms and real terms using 1986-87 prices and using an index of 100 for 1978-79.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: The information available is given in the following tables which have been compiled from local authority financial returns. Expenditure on equipment was not separately identified in these returns until 1982-83. There have been some variations from year to year in the recording of expenditure under these 2 headings. In particular some of the figures for expenditure on text and library books may include some expenditure on items of equipment.

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent by local authorities on (a) school transport and (b) school meals in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the comparable figures for each year since 1978-79 in cash terms and real terms using 1986-87 prices and using an index of 100 for 1978-79.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: The information is set out in the table:

SDA (Expenditure)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish, for each parliamentary constituency, the amounts spent on (a) industrial investments and (b) environmental improvements by the Scottish Development Agency in each year since 1983.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 3 July 1987, c. 202]: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Rating Reform

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the studies compiled on likely collection rates for the community charge, and if he will place them in the Library.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1987]: My right hon. and learned Friend is not aware of any published systematic study assessing the levels of likely community charge collection rates in Scotland.

Nursery Education

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the proportion of children aged 3 and 4 who, in 1986-87, were in receipt of nursery education in (a) each local education authority area and (b) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply, 20 July 1987, c. 78]: Information for 1986-87 is not available: the latest available information is set out in the following table:

DEFENCE

Cobra Counter Artillery Battery Radar Location System

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on progress on the Cobra counter artillery battery radar location system and on international collaboration by the United Kingdom on the project.

Mr. Sainsbury: The three collaborative partners have recently concluded their evaluation of proposals from three competing consortia. Detailed contractual negotiations are now opening and final contractor selection would depend on the outcome of these negotiations. At the same time, options other than a collaborative development are also under consideration, and a decision whether to proceed with a collaborative project is not expected to be taken before the end of this year.

Low-Flying Aircraft

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent (a) low-flying by the Royal Air Force and (b) the number of public complaints thereat has increased over the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 22 April, Official Report columns 584 and 585. Thus far (as at end of June) 1987 figures are 74,421 sorties and 1,912 complaints.

Edinburgh Airport (Exercises)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence which military jet aircraft are being deployed from Edinburgh airport in the course of military flying exercises; in what circumstances; and for how long.

Mr. Freeman: The airfield at Edinburgh airport adjoining RAF Turnhouse provides diversion landing facilities for aircraft from RAF Leuchars. From time to time, various military aircraft also stage through Edinburgh en route to or from exercises elsewhere.

Equipment Orders

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Defence; pursuant to his reply, Official Report 13 July, column 344, whether he will list those categories of overseas orders for defence equipment placed in the United Kingdom which do not have to be notified to the Defence Export Services Organisation and which are exempt from licence arrangements.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985, as amended, identifies the equipments, materials and technologies for which an export licence is required. Defence exports not so identified may be exported without a licence and without reference to the Defence Export Services Organisation.

Benbecula Airport (Land)

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has any plans to buy or lease from the Civil Aviation Authority any part of the land area known as An Tom, on the north-east side of Benbecula airport.

Mr. Freeman: The land area known as An Tom has been leased from the Civil Aviation Authority since 1972.

UKADAGE Radar Stations

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the acreages of the operational radar sites of the UKADAGE radar stations at (a) Saxa Vord, Shetland, (b) South Clettraval, North Uist, (c) RAF Buchan, Aberdeenshire, (d) Bishopscourt, Northern Ireland and (e) Boulmer, Northumberland.

Mr. Freeman: It is not possible to specify the acreages of the operational radar sites listed as they form an integral part of RAF Station complexes. However, the acreages for each of the RAF stations are as follows:

	Acres
(a) Saxa Vord, Shetland	43·63 (freehold)
(b) South Clettraval, North Uist	15·17 (freehold)
(c) RAF Buchan, Aberdeenshire	91·15 (freehold) 25·98 (leasehold)
(d) Bishopscourt, Northern Ireland	585·07 (freehold) 19·65 (leasehold)
(e) Boulmer, Northumberland	138·04 (freehold) 19·73 (leasehold)

No. 4 Flying Training School, RAF

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the establishment of a permanent training detachment from No. 4 Flying Training School, Royal Air Force, at (a) RAF Stornoway and (b) Benbecula airport.

Mr. Freeman: There are no plans to establish a permanent training detachment at either RAF Stornoway or Benbecula airport.

Western Isles (Military Construction Projects)

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all currently planned military construction projects in the Western Isles.

Mr. Freeman: The major projects currently planned in the Western Isles are as follows;

RAF Stornoway
Hardened aircraft shelters with associated support buildings.
Additional fuel storage with interconnecting on base pipeline.
Jetty at Gob Shilldinish with pipeline to airfield
Improved air traffic control facilities.

RAF Benbecula
Completion of works for the IUKADGE [1] facilities including:
Support building.
Radar installation.
Ducting
Electrical works.

South Uist Island
Marconi ST 802 Radar
Explosive storehouse

[1] Improved United Kingdom Air Defence Ground Environment.

RAF Aird Uig, Lewis

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence what functions are performed by the RAF station at Aird Uig, Lewis.

Mr. Freeman: Aird Uig is a low frequency transmitting station for the support of RAF maritime operations.

RAF Stornoway

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the design of hardened aircraft shelters to be constructed at RAF Stornoway permits cross-servicing of United States tactical combat aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: This would depend upon aircraft size and logistics requirements.

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what consideration has been given to the re-establishment of electronic countermeasures monitoring range facilities at RAF Stornoway;

(2) what consideration has been given to the re-establishment of a radar bomb-scoring unit at RAF Stornoway.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Stornoway Airport

Mr. Macdonald asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the title, dates, scope and purposes of all military exercises which are scheduled to involve use of Stornoway airport in 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Freeman: The appropriate authorities will be given as much notice as possible about future exercises to take place at RAF Stornoway, in accordance with longstanding arrangements.

Staffordshire (Public Safety)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the text of any correspondence he has had with Staffordshire county council, the Staffordshire police or any other public body since 1979 on matters of public safety in general and on military exercises involving radioactive dust in particular.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Ministry of Defence takes a responsible attitude towards all aspects of safety, including nuclear safety. Its correspondence with public bodies on public safety in general will, therefore, be extensive. Some of it, including most of that relating to nuclear accident response exercises, is classified. For these reasons, I am not in a position to publish it.

Radioactive Materials (Saint Athan)

Mr. Win Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment has been made of the risk of the radioactive materials stored at Saint Athan contaminating people and in particular those working on the base, living nearby or visiting the base on occasions such as the open day;

(2) what assessment has been made of the risk of the radioactive materials stored and used in training exercises at Saint Athan entering the environment and contaminating it via soil, water and winds;

(3) whether the local authority emergency services in South Wales were informed about the nuclear accident response team at Saint Athan and its use of nuclear materials when it was established;

(4) what radioactive contaminants are (a) used in exercises and (b) brought to Saint Athan; and what is the half-life of each radio nuclide involved;

(5) what is the precise function of the nuclear accident response unit based at Saint Athan; on what occasions the unit has been used (a) within Wales and (b) outside Wales; and whether it was involved in the accident at West Dean, Wiltshire, in January when a nuclear weapons carrier overturned;

(6) why Saint Athan was chosen as the base for a nuclear accident response team; and when the team began operating from there.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment specifically on the storage of defence nuclear material. Use of nuclear materials throughout the Ministry of Defence is subject to stringent procedures to ensure the safety of the personnel involved and of the general public. There is full liaison on appropriate issues with the emergency services at all RAF stations in the United Kingdom. It is not, however, our practice to comment in detail on particular units or establishments that might be involved in the response to an accident involving defence nuclear material.

Trident

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States Navy authorities require Her Majesty's Government's formal approval before deploying Trident C4 armed submarines to replace the existing Poseidon-armed vessels at Holy Loch; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The position remains as stated by my right hon. Friend, the hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley) in his reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) of 19 November 1986 at column 224.

James Gibb (Accident)

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the report of the inquiry into James Gibb's accident on the Dartmoor national park will be made public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is not our policy to make public the findings of boards of inquiry. However, a public statement may be appropriate once the board of inquiry into this incident has been completed.

Beef

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many tons of beef for consumption by Her Majesty's forces has been purchased from (a) Uruguay, (b) New Zealand and (c) Australia and any other foreign nation in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what is the projected amount for the current year.

Mr. Freeman: The MOD purchases annually in excess of 3,000 tonnes of beef, averaging some £8 million a year, for consumption worldwide by the armed forces. Because procurement of this beef, in accordance with Government policy, is the subject of competitive tendering action from United Kingdom and European Economic Community firms, who obtain their supplies from normal trade sources, it is not possible to provide detailed information regarding the origin of the beef, although it has been established that the bulk of purchases for the current year will, in fact, come from EEC countries. MOD contracts are, of course, placed on the basis of obtaining best value for money, taking account of the United Kingdom's international treaty obligations as well as the need to meet MOD's quality standards.

Radioactive Contaminants (Exercises)

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Defence what use has been made of (a) cadets and (b) women in exercises involving radioactive contaminants.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Information is not held centrally on the degree of involvement of cadets or women in such exercises, and could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information he has of any breaches of security during exercises involving radioactive contaminants;

(2) what information he has of any disciplinary action taken against armed service personnel following exercises involving radioactive contaminants.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Such matters would normally be dealt with at unit or establishment level and would not be reported to the Ministry of Defence. Information on breaches of security and disciplinary action on such occasions is not therefore held centrally, and could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many armed service personnel have received medical check-ups after being involved in exercises involving radioactive contaminants since 1 January 1981.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) of 20 July at columns 95-96.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list all the chemicals in the radioactive material used by his Department in Operation Senator in 1981.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: It is not our practice to comment in detail on specific exercises. Details of the radio-isotopes contained in live contaminant used in nuclear accident response exercises were given in my reply to the hon. Lady and the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) of 22 July.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence, what quantity of radium 223 sulphate, diluted with barium sulphate and aluminium oxide, is typically used in military training exercises simulating nuclear accidents.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: It is our policy to use only the smallest quantity of radioactive material, of the lowest level of radioactivity required to achieve relevant instrument readings and meet essential training objectives. The same precautions are taken as would be taken in the event of a real accident and are therefore inherently many times more rigorous than the training material itself warrants.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the source of the radium 223 used in training exercises.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: The live contaminant used in nuclear accident response exercises is obtained from commercial sources, such as Amersham International.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information was given to police and other personnel active in Swynnerton, Staffordshire, as to the extent to which they were exposed to radioactive materials as a result of military exercises.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: Officials of the police and other external authorities are given appropriate information before each exercise involving the use of radioactive materials. Access by both military and civilian personnel to contaminated areas during those phases of a nuclear accident response exercise involving the use of contaminated material is strictly controlled. Personnel involved are required to wear protective clothing appropriate to the levels of contamination to which they have access, and to undergo full monitoring and decontamination procedures on their exit from the area. The need for these safety procedures is fully explained to those involved.

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the issuing of protective clothing to civilian police on duty in the vicinity of exercises involving radioactive contaminants.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the pursuant answer I have given today to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South (Mr. Ashley).

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer of 15 July, Official Report, columns 1129-1135, what method was used to spray radioactive contaminants during the tests referred to.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: A variety of methods for laying liquid low-level radioactive contaminant has been used in nuclear accident exercises including, typically, a hand-held, short range, directional dispenser. All methods are designed to ensure that the application of contaminant is restricted to a designated area with due regard being given to such external factors as weather and wind direction and strength.

Single-role Minehunters

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is now in a position to announce increases in the numbers of single-role minehunters to be made available to the Royal Navy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) yesterday.

Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent by his Department on official hospitality in each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is as follows:

1985-86	2,858,465
1986-87	2,906,519

The amounts quoted represent total expenditure borne on Defence Votes for the provision of entertainment. They therefore include expenditure incurred not only by the Ministry of Defence itself, but also by formations and establishments of the Armed Forces at home and abroad and by individual officers occupying command and international appointments for which entertainment allowances are payable.

The 1985-86 figure is an update to that given in reply to a similar question from the hon. Member on 6 May at column 104 when some overseas expenditure had yet to be brought to account.

Whale Products

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any whale products have been purchased by his Department in the past two years.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, South of 20 July, if he will now state the number of people employed in the nuclear accident response organisation and the qualifications of managers involved in simulated nuclear accidents.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Except for small staffs in MOD headquarters and service commands, the nuclear accident response organisation is a functional grouping of people primarily employed on other tasks. All those involved are suitably trained and qualified.

Espionage

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Defence what safeguards against espionage are being considered in the special study examining the scope for extending the use of contractors to provide support services for the British forces in Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The recommendations of the study into the scope for extending the use of contractors to provide supporting services to the British forces in Germany are currently under consideration. When final decisions are taken security considerations will be fully taken into account in the implementation process.

Exercises (Pacific)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government plan any further naval exercises, either singly or in conjunction with other Governments, in the Pacific region, and in particular in the territorial waters of the four United Nations trust territories of Micronesia.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We have no plans at present for naval exercises in this area.

Defence Establishments (Statistics)

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list by standard regional classification those defence establishments which employ more than 400 people, providing details of the number of (a) military and (b) civilian personnel at each establishment where security considerations do not prevent the figures being divulged; and whether he will provide a summary of the total number of (i) military and (ii) civilian personnel employed in each of the regions.

Mr. Sainsbury: It would not be in the public interest to provide a list of numbers in defence establishments in the detail requested.

The numbers of United Kingdom service personnel and MOD civilians deployed by standard region are centrally recorded on an annual basis at 1 July but the numbers for 1987 will not be available before October. The details for 1986 in thousands are as follows:

	Thousands
	United Kingdom Service personnel	MOD civilians
National Totals
England	191·7	136·5
Wales	6·3	6·2
Scotland	19·7	17·9
Northern Ireland	10·5	2·7
Standard Regions of England
North	1·9	3·5
Yorkshire & Humberside	14·8	6·3
East Midlands	13·6	4·5
East Anglia	16·3	2·7
South East	84·6	64·9
South West	49·0	42·4
West Midlands	9·4	9·3
North West	2·2	3·1

In addition there were 1,300 Gurkha troops in South East region.

Ark Royal

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has had with Swan Hunter, following the hull plate damage HMS Ark Royal suffered on 27 January allegedly the result of faulty workmanship.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence will be discussing the position with Swan Hunter now that survey work has given an indication of the cause of the damage.

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether full and comprehensive repairs are being carried out to HMS Ark Royal following hull plate damage suffered on 27 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Minor damage was suffered to a small area of hull plating in HMS Ark Royal on 27 January but, following temporary repairs she returned to normal duties. The damage has recently been fully surveyed and final repairs are now in hand, during the routine docking period at Portsmouth which began on 13 July.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the present situation regarding co-operation on research and development of strategic defence initiative with the United States of America.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 14 July at columns 956-957.

Review Board (Report)

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the report by the review board on its fifth general review of the profit formula for Government non-competitive contracts.

Mr. Younger: The Government have accepted the overall target rate of return on capital employed recommended by the review board in its report. This rate will be effective from 1 July this year. There are some other points in the report which officials will be pursuing with the CBI, in the context of implementing the recommendations, as part of the continuing drive to secure value for money and to promote full efficiency in the performance of defence work. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Lance (Warheads)

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what nuclear warheads for Lance have been deployed by the United States in support of the British Army of the Rhine since 1981.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: The United States-owned and supplied nuclear warheads which are assigned to British forces operating Lance systems in the Federal Republic of Germany have always been of the non-enhanced radiation type, on which the position remains as stated by my right hon. Friend the hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley) in his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 8 May 1987 column 557.

Military Training Assistance

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list those countries (a) which currently receive military training assistance and (b) whose applications for such assistance are currently being considered.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: It is not our practice to reveal discussions between Her Majesty's Government and foreign Governments about future training possibilities. The list of countries which were provided with military training assistance in the financial year 1986-87 is as follows:

Algeria
Australia
Bahamas
Bahrain

TRANSPORT

Coastguard (Swansea)

Mr. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total number of annual manpower hours allocated to each sector in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 in the Swansea region of the coastguard service; and what was the number of callouts in 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. David Mitchell: The allocation of auxiliary coastguard hours to each sector is a matter for the region, taking due account of financial budgets, the varying numbers of stations in each sector, changes in membership numbers at stations and other requirements for auxiliary assistance. Sector allocations are given in the table, together with district totals of occasions when members of auxiliary companies in Swansea region were called out to render assistance where human life was thought to be at risk.

True comparisons cannot be drawn between the annual allocations of hours by sector because of differences in coverage. Some reductions have taken place as part of a planned programme to bring resources into line with current requirements, while maintaining the overall effectiveness of the auxiliary service. Call-out figures are not readily available by financial year or by sector.

South Yorkshire Passenger Transport Authority

Mr. Illsley asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether extra money will be made available to the South Yorkshire passenger transport authority to make grants for the transport needs of elderly and disabled persons under section 106 of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for the passenger transport authority to determine how much it spends on individual items within its overall budget. Its expenditure level for 1988-89 has been determined at £41·5 million.

M25 (Road Widening)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the widening of the M25 between Chertsey and Heathrow.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consultants are currently preparing a scheme for additional fourth lanes on the M25 between junctions 11 (Chertsey) and 13 (Staines). I shall make a further announcement about this as soon as possible. We have no plans for widening the existing dual four-lane sections of the motorway north of junction 13.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Transport, since the wearing of seat belts became compulsory for car drivers and front-seat passengers, how many of the following categories of person have been killed or seriously injured in each year: (a) drivers, (b) front-seat passengers, (c) back-seat passengers, (d) motorcyclists and cyclists in collision with motor vehicles and (e) pedestrians in collision with motor vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall write to my hon. and learned Friend.

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many serious road accidents there have been in each year since the wearing of car seat belts became compulsory; and how many there were in each year over the same number of years before compulsion.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is as follows:

Serious Accidents: Great Britain
February 1980—January 1986

Year	Number
Pre-compulsory seat belt wearing
February 1980-January 1981	65,336
February 1981-January 1982	64,548
February 1982-January 1983	66,619
Post-compulsory seat belt wearing
February 1983-January 1984	59,735
February 1984-January 1985	61,479
[1]Feburary 1985-January 1986	60,907

[1] Provisional.

An analysis of the effect of compulsory seat-belt wearing on injuries was covered in the Department of Transport's report in October 1985.

Cars (Mirrors)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make the fitting of front-wing mirrors on the passenger side of motor vehicles compulsory.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Nearside mirrors must be fitted in vehicles with no internal rear view mirror, such as lorries. Most cars are fitted with nearside mirrors. Under directive 85/205/EEC, this cannot be made compulsory.

National Bus Company

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the former National Bus Company companies which have been privatised by type of purchase including management buyout.

Mr. David Mitchell: Thirty-nine National Bus Company subsidiaries have been sold since sales began in July 1986, 25 to their own managements or employees. The details are as follows:

Diabetics (Vocational Licences)

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to remove all obstacles which restrict the freedom of diabetics to drive under vocational licences on the public highway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Under European Community law, insulin-treated diabetics are not permitted to drive heavy goods or public service vehicles on public roads. Prior to 1983 drivers taking certain tablet treatment were also prohibited, but the rules have now been relaxed to allow those taking oral preparations to continue to hold a licence.

North Circular Road (Newham)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for designing or constructing a second flyover at the intersection of the A13 and the North Circular road in Newham; and at what date he expects it to be in operation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have not yet made a decision about widening the flyover at this junction. Studies are still in progress. We are also considering converting the existing one-way flyover to take traffic in both directions at certain times of day.

London Underground (One-man Operation)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what reports he has received from the Chief Inspector of Railways concerning proposals to extend one person operation to deep-tube railways in London.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Underground Ltd. has developed plans for the extension of one-person operation to their deep-tube railways. These plans have been shown and demonstrated to the Railway Inspectorate, which is satisfied that they will provide a proper level of safety. The Secretary of State is not required to approve formally the method of operation of London Underground's trains; this is a matter for the railways' management which is responsible for the safe day-to-day operation of its railways.

Buses (London)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the numbers of crew-operated rear platform buses operated in Central London by London Regional Transport and the numbers he expects them to operate in each of the next five years.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Regional Transport's operating subsidiary, London Buses Ltd., currently has 1,044 such buses in passenger service, predominantly in central and inner London. A further 50 are employed on London sightseeing tours. The requirement in future years is an operational matter for LRT and London Buses Ltd. to determine.

Merseyside PTE (Expenditure)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the spending guidelines for 1988-89 determined by him for the Merseyside passenger transport executive.

Mr. David Mitchell: The 1988-89 expenditure level for the Merseyside passenger transport authority has now been determined at £58·5 million. The authority is free to make a reasoned application for a redetermination of this figure if it so wishes.

Night Flights (London)

Mr. Ground asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the night flying at Heathrow and Gatwick, respectively, for 1985 and 1986 summer and winter seasons, met ICAO Chapter 3 Regulations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department does not have such information. The relevant airport companies could produce it only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ground asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of night flying at Heathrow and Gatwick is composed of (a) charter and (b) scheduled aircraft movements.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department does not keep such records for the night restrictions period. I understand that at Heathrow there are very few chartered passenger flights at night. A57, Denton (Traffic Lights)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps as a matter of priority to install temporary traffic lights at the junction of the A57 Manchester Road and Hule Road, Denton.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Very high costs and practical difficulties rule out a temporary installation here. The promised permanent traffic signals will be installed next year in conjunction with other improvements to the A57.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Ms. Walley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail for what purposes the transport supplementary grant can be used; if he has any plans to change the transport supplementary grant so that local councils can implement the recommendations of his Department's document "Measures to Control Traffic for the Benefit of Residents, Pedestrians and Cyclists"; and if he will outline how those recommendations are to be financed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Transport supplementary grant (TSG) is paid in support of local authorities' capital expenditure on roads of more than local importance. Expenditure on schemes of the kind described in the traffic advisory unit leaflet 1/87, "Measures to control traffic for the benefit of residents, pedestrians and cyclists", would be considered for support through TSG if forming part of a road improvement or traffic management scheme on a road of more than local importance.

Copies of the leaflet were placed in the Library in March. It is a technical publication aimed at drawing attention to ways of handling traffic in residential areas and giving greater emphasis to the needs of residents. Comments on the techniques were invited with a view to the publication of further, more detailed information in due course.

Implementation is for local authorities to consider in the light of local circumstances and resources.

On-train Trolley Services

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the Chairman of British Rail, he will raise with him the case for operators of on-train services to be required to display (a) the name and address of the company holding the franchise and (b) their price list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: These are management matters for the Railways Board.

East Midlands Bus Company

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the proposed sale of the East Midlands bus company to a private buyer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The National Bus Company welcomes outside bids for all its subsidiaries, including East Midlands Motor Services, provided that they are from parties who intend to continue bus operations. NBC also encourage bids from management and employee teams; such bids can be eligible for a price preference of up to about 5 per cent. over third party offers.

Helicopters

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 20 July, if he will give details of the revision of the emergency reporting procedures for helicopters for Sumburgh and Aberdeen airports following the mandatory occurrence reports submitted in March 1982.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Aviation safety regulation is the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. I will ask the chairman of the authority to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Railways (Tourism and Employment)

Mr. Amos asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his assessment of the role of the railway network in Northumberland in bringing employment and tourism to the county; if, when he next meets the Chairman of British Rail he will raise with him the implications for that role of the present standards of reliability on the London to Newcastle and Newcastle to Carlisle lines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I want to see the quality of BR's service improved over its network as a whole. That is why we have just agreed standards for punctuality, reliability and other aspects of service quality. I shall be monitoring the board's performance against them.

Grants (Bridges)

Mr. Amos asked the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria are used, in allocating grants to local authorities for transport purposes, to assess the urgency of structural repairs to bridges on or over roads for which local authorities are responsible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Transport supplementary grant (TSG) is paid to local authorities in support of accepted programmes of capital works on roads of more than local importance. Expenditure on structural repairs to bridges on such roads may be accepted for TSG if the original load-carrying capacity is increased. It is for local authorities to decide the priority to be given within their road programmes to structural improvements to bridges.

Mr. Amos asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will visit Northumberland to discuss the state of structural repair of bridges on and over roads for which he has responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Bridges in Northumberland carrying local roads which are in need of structural repair are the responsibility of the county council as the local highway authority. I saw some of them when I visited Northumberland last year and I discussed this matter with the council earlier this year on the occasion of the northern regional annual consultative committee meeting.

Structural improvement to local bridges to increase their local carrying capacity may be eligible for transport supplementary grant. I am now awaiting the council's bid for this for 1988-89.

Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent by his Department on official hospitality in each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The amounts spent by the Department of Transport on the full range of official hospitality are as follows:

1985-86	88,634
1986-87	94,295

A69 (Dualling)

Mr. Amos asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his assessment of the role of the A69 in the economic prosperity of the north of England; when he expects to announce a date for the commencement of work to convert to dual carriageway the A69 west of Hexham to Carlisle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We fully appreciate the importance of the A69 to the northern region as a strategic east-west route linking the A1(M) to the M6 and Tyne and Wear to north-west England and western Scotland. It is for this reason that we have been proceeding with a series of improvements to the A69 in recent years, and the dualling of the section between Newcastle and Hexham will be completed shortly.

West of Hexham, traffic flows are much lighter — down to about 7,000 vehicles a day — and dualling cannot be justified. This stretch is being improved to a high single carriageway standard with short section of dual carriageway to facilitate overtaking. This will enable it to cope more than adequately with predicted increases in traffic over the next 15 to 20 years.

Settle-Carlisle Railway

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to hold over any announcement of his decision on the retention of the Settle-Carlisle railway until after the House reassembles following the Summer Adjournment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am also under pressure to end the uncertainty over the future of the Settle-Carlisle line. I intend to make an announcement as soon as the considerable work involved in preparing for a decision is complete and Ministers have come to a conclusion.

LRT (Chiswick Site)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has been informed of any transfer of ownership of land at the Chiswick site occupied by Bus Engineering Ltd. to Bus Engineering Ltd. from London Regional Transport or any subsidiary of London Regional Transport;

(2) what communication there has been between his Department and London Regional Transport concerning the proposed sale of land in Chiswick; when such communication took place; and if he has given his consent to the sale;

(3) if he will make a statement about the proposed sale of Bus Engineering Ltd. by London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Regional Transport announced on 10 July that it was seeking offers for the sale of its subsidiary company, LRT Bus Engineering Ltd. My right hon. Friend has received no request for his consent, either to the disposal of any securities of the subsidiary which are held by LRT, or to the transfer of any land between LRT and the subsidiary.

Merchant Shipping (Re-registration)

Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications have been received for the re-registration of foreign ships as British ships during the last five years; and in which countries those ships were originally registered.

Mr. David Mitchell: The number of ships of over 100 gross registered tons which were entered on the United Kingdom register under part I of the Merchant Shipping Act 1894 and which were previously on foreign registers was as follows:

in 1986—75 ships from 23 different foreign registers in 1987 so far 37 ships from 18 different foreign registers

Information for earlier years and for the Crown dependencies and dependent territories could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Bus Routes (London)

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has issued to the Board of London Regional Transport concerning tender specifications for London bus routes; what account such advice took of the needs of disabled people; and if he will place copies of the advice in the Library.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have issued no advice concerning tender specifications for bus routes. LRT does, however, have a general statutory duty in securing the provision of passenger services to have due regard to the transport needs of disabled people.

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for Transport what instructions he has issued to the board of London Regional Transport, concerning the timespan within which London buses are to put routes out to tender; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Regional Transport has a general statutory duty to invite tenders to carry on those of its activities it may declare to be appropriate. The current objectives which the Government have set the Chairman include a requirement to involve the private sector in the provision of services where that is more efficient. Beyond that, the timing and nature of tendering of bus routes are matters for LRT.

Air Misses (Carlisle)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will institute an inquiry into the incidence of aircraft near misses in the air space in the vicinity of Carlisle airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The Civil Aviation Authority, through the National Air Traffic Services, has statutory responsibility for all matters concerning air traffic control. The reported air miss near Carlisle on 15 July 1987 is under investigation by the CAA's joint air miss working group which investigates all air miss reports. I understand that the incidence of air misses near Carlisle have been no different from that over other parts of the country where traffic volumes are similar.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. [illegible] Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimated expenditure on management and computer consultants by the Department of Transport in 1987-88 is £3·4 million.

Severn Crossing

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the proposed second crossing of the River Severn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Tenders have been invited today from selected consultants for the next stage of scheme preparation for this project. We hope to appoint the successful consultant by early October, who will then undertake the detailed investigations and consultations that are necessary in carrying this project forward. The consultant will then have to prepare the plans to suit the engineering and environmental conditions of the route we have already selected, and the funding, contracting and legal procedures that will be appropriate for this large and complex project.

We are on target to provide this crossing by the mid-1990s, if the build-up of traffic across the estuary needs it by then and Parliament so decides.

Chief Highways Engineers Directorate

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his conclusions on the Rayner scrutiny of the role of the Chief Highways Engineers Directorate.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I expect to publish my conclusions shortly when my Department has completed its consultation with the central trade union side. I will then place a copy of the scrutiny report and its action plan in the Library of the House of Commons.

Buses

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Transport what change there has been in the accident rate involving buses since bus deregulation.

Mr. David Mitchell: Provisional figures for the first six months of deregulation, October 1986 to March 1987, indicate a fall in bus occupant casualties over the country as a whole of 7 per cent. compared with the same period a year ago. However, because bus accidents are comparatively rare, a very few additional accidents, from whatever cause, can lend the statistics a misleading appearance. It can be especially misleading to attempt to relate movements in accident statistics involving buses to particular events in relatively small areas, as has recently been attempted in West Yorkshire.

BA/B-Cal Merger

Mr. Cran asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to ensure that there are sufficient safeguards in the regulations governing the newly privatised British Airports Authority plc to ensure that independent British scheduled and charter airlines' rights of access to Gatwick will not be diminished in the event of the proposed merger of British Airways and British Caledonian being allowed to proceed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Airports Act 1986 provides appropriate safeguards, should these prove necessary. Section 31 empowers the Secretary of State to make traffic distribution rules regulating airlines' access to certain airports such as Gatwick. Section 33 provides a reserve power for the Secretary of State to introduce schemes to allocate capacity at certain airports between airlines. Section 41 empowers the Civil Aviation Authority to remedy or prevent any trade practice or pricing policy on the part of an airport operator that unreasonably discriminates against particular airlines or classes of airlines.

Dial-a-ride Services (Yorkshire)

Mr. Illsley asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Government have any proposals to increase funding to either Barnsley metropolitan district council or the South Yorkshire residual body to expand dial-a-ride services.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

The Barnsley dial-a-ride service is part of the Barnsley community transport co-ordination scheme which is currently given financial support by the Government under the 1987-88 Barnsley inner area programme. Implementation is a matter for the Barnsley metropolitan district council.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quotas

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about milk quota leasing.

Mr. MacGregor: As I have already announced to the House, as part of this year's price fixing, we secured agreement that a measure would be implemented to permit the continuation of milk quota leasing. We have been urging the completion of the necessary regulations as quickly as possible, and considerable progress has been made. But adoption itself will not be possible until after the summer holiday because of the need, first, to consult the European Parliament.

In view, however, of the importance which we attached to the early implementation of a leasing arrangement, and to assist producers, my right hon. Friends and I have agreed that preparation for leasing arrangements can be pursued in the meantime. The milk marketing boards will accordingly be announcing shortly the details of a scheme whereby producers who wish to participate in leasing arrangements will notify the appropriate milk marketing board. The board will then automatically adjust the quotas of the farmers concerned as soon as the regulation is formally adopted.

Mr. Amos asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from farmers about the implication for the dairy industry about the fact that milk quota is not considered to be a qualifying asset under the Capital Gains Tax Act 1979 in terms of eligibility for roll-over relief; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have received a number of representations about the fact that milk quota is not an asset qualifying for roll-over relief against capital gains tax. Taxation policy is, however, the responsibility of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply that he has received from the Chancellor to a similar question.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what information he has as to the highest known price paid per litre of milk quota in (a) East Sussex and (b) elsewhere; what litreage has been purchased by persons not resident in the United Kingdom; what has been the average rate of return of milk producers in each of the past three years; and what is the reason for the premium paid for milk quotas.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No records are kept on the price of quota and I therefore have no detailed information on the price paid for milk quota in East Sussex or eleswhere. So far as purchases of quota by persons not resident in the United Kingdom are concerned, it is not possible for United Kingdom milk quota to be transferred outside its boundaries. Information on the returns to milk producers in 1984-85 and 1986-86 is published in "Milk Production 1984-85" and "Milk Production 1985-86; copies of these publications are available in the Library of the House. Figures for 1986-87 are not yet available. The price paid for milk quota is a reflection of market demand and the continued overall profitability of the dairy sector.

Fishing Quotas

Mr. Neale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Government propose to introduce legislation on the registration of fishing vessels designed to ensure that the United Kingdom quotas are reserved for United Kingdom fishermen.

Mr. Harris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to prevent foreign-owned fishing vessels from gaining access to United Kingdom quotas; and when such measures will be introduced.

Mr. MacGregor: My predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Jopling), announced on 9 May that the Government had decided that the law on the registration of fishing vessels should be changed so that, in order to obtain registration of a British fishing vessel, a company will have to be largely owned and managed by British citizens resident and domiciled in this country. The Government's intention is to include the necessary provisions in the Merchant Shipping Bill which it is hoped will be introduced in the autumn.

Queens' Speech

Mr. Thurnham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about proposals in the Queen's Speech for which he has responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Queen's Speech stated that the Government would help farmers to diversify and would introduce legislation to encourage the planting of farm woodlands. Consultation documents entitled "Farm Woodland Scheme" and "Farm Diversification Scheme" were issued earlier this year. A large number of responses have been received and we shall take these into account in framing our legislative proposals.

Cow Effluent

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations have been received by him concerning the extension of the 60 per cent. grant for the disposal of cow effluent in less-favoured areas to the rest of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Representations have been received from a number of organisations including the water authorities, the Country Landowners Association and the National Farmers Union, concerning the extension to the lowland areas of the 60 per cent. rate of grant now available for effluent and waste facilities in the less favoured areas.

However, the relevant European Community legislation does not permit the payment of the 60 per cent. rate in lowland areas.

Agricultural Land

Mr. Rooker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he expects the decline in the use of land for agriculture to continue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is difficult to predict the future trend in the diversion of land from agriculture to other uses, but we have recently announced a number of new policy initiatives to encourage farmers to diversify, with the aim of reducing production of commodities in surplus.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate has been made as to the amount of farmland taken out of production in each year since 1973.

Mr. Gummer: Some of the information my hon. Friend requires was given in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen) on Thursday 12 February 1987 at col 287. I shall write to my hon. Friend giving further information shortly.

Water Pollution

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many incidents of water pollution by farm wastes were recorded in each of the years 1980 to 1986, and in 1987 to date, in England; how many of these incidents were attributable to pollution by silage effluent, and by slurry; and how many of these incidents were the subject of warning letters and prosecutions.

Mr. Gummer: Statistics on farm waste pollution incidents and water authority prosecutions are collated by my Department and the Water Authorities Association. Although the exact information requested is not available for England alone, a considerable volume of information covering England and Wales for the years 1980 to 1985 was published in the 1985 survey of reported water pollution incidents by farm wastes in England and Wales, copies of which were placed in the Library. The equivalent 1986 survey is still in preparation. No 1987 statistics have yet been collated centrally.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total estimated cost of intervention storage in each European Community country in each of the past five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Community expenditure on intervention storage in each member state in each of the past five years is set out in the table. Details of actual expenditure by member states on intervention storage operations are not available.

Sugar

Mr. Spearing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) of 8 July, Official Report, column 154, what is the source of the funds used to defray the difference between £621 million of increase from the sugar levy and the year's expenditure of £1,061 million in the year 1985.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Sugar sector expenditure not covered by sugar levies is funded in the normal way through the own resources system comprising customs duties, agricultural levies and VAT. This expenditure will be partly offset by receipts from the elimination levy agreed by the Council in 1986 designed to claw back the deficit on the production levy/export refund account which had arisen in the five marketing years up to 1985-86, in the next five marketing years.

Mr. Spearing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will tabulate the quantity of raw cane sugar imported by each member state of the European Economic Community, including imports from Departments Outre Mer, for the most recent available year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Imports of preferential ACP sugar in the period July 1985 to June 1986 were as follows (figures in thousand tonnes white sugar equivalent):

	Thousand tonnes
Belgium	0·4
Denmark	—
France	137·1
Germany	0·2
Greece	—
Ireland	—
Italy	—
Luxembourg	—
Netherlands	1·5
Portugal	—
Spain	—
United Kingdom	1,141·7

Similar information for imports of raw sugar from the French Overseas Departments is not available. In line with new arrangements following Portuguese accession, however, 185,000 tonnes and 254,000 tonnes of raw cane sugar for import, excluding preferential sugar, were allocated to metropolitan France and Portugal respectively for the 1986-87 marketing year.

Thames Barrier

Mr. Spearing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the dates on which the Thames barrier has been closed for emergency reasons since September 1986; and for each closure, what was the height of the tidal surge above ordnance datum at Southend, Gravesend and at the barrier, respectively, together with their heights above predicted levels at each location.

Mr. Gummer: Since September 1986 the Thames barrier has been closed against potential flooding only on 29 March 1987. On that occasion the maximum recorded high water levels above ordnance datum were 3·6 m at Southend, 3·88 m in the area of Gravesend and 4·35 m at Woolwich close to the barrier. The Southend level was 0·5 m and the Tilbury and Woolwich levels 0·3 m above the predicted levels shown in published tide tables.

Mr. Spearing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the works in hand to complete the Thames flood defences downstream of the Thames flood barrier; and if he will make a statement concerning the circumstances of the recent breach of flood defences in Barking creek.

Mr. Gummer: The Thames tidal defences downstream of the Thames flood barrier are now complete save for minor works near Southend-on-Sea. The flooding from Barking creek on 14 July 1987 occurred as a result of slippage of the river bank during work on sluices controlling discharges from Beckton sewerage treatment works. Adjacent buildings, roads and playing fields were flooded during the early hours of that day. Further flooding after the dawn high tide was, however, prevented by closure of the Barking flood barrier. The river bank was restored on 15 July and there have been no further problems.

West Coast Saith Quota

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he has identified the vessels and fish producers' organisations which overfished the west coast saith's quota, resulting in premature closure; and what action he proposes to take against them.;

(2) what compensation he proposes to offer to the Grimsby Fish Producers Organisation whose west coast saith quota was prematurely closed because of overfishing by other vessels.

Mr. Gummer: As regards penalties and compensation for over- or under-fishing of sectoral quotas, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Kingston-upon-Hull, West (Mr. Randell) on 17 July. We shall consider the application of these arrangements once the final catch figures for the different organisations are available and once we know whether or not additional saith opportunities are available from another member state.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he proposes to ensure that overfishing and premature closure of the west coast saith quota does not happen again.

Mr. Gummer: Fisheries Departments are urgently reviewing arrangements for monitoring catches in the area IV and VI white fisheries, and will put in hand any possible improvements identified. In addition, we propose to discuss with the industry the possibility of arrangements for suspending licences of any group approaching the limit of its sectoral allocations so as to allow a definitive assessment to be made of the catch position before the allocation is exceeded.

West Coast Cod Quota

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how close the west coast cod quota is to exhaustion; and what compensation he will offer to those fish producers organisations whose quota is incomplete if catching is prematurely stopped.

Mr. Gummer: The latest data available on catches to 4 July suggests that approximately 85 per cent. of the United Kingdom quota for west of Scotland cod had been taken by that date. If the previous unusually high rate of catching continued thereafter we estimate that the annual quota would be exhausted by about the end of July. However, we expect the rate of catching to have been reduced as a result of the quota management restrictions introduced for the non-sectoral fishery on 7 July and the action taken, with effect from 18 July, to suspend licences for the non-sectoral fishery and for those sectoral groups whose allocation was exhausted, which jointly account for the major part of this fishery.

In view of the seasonal pattern of fishing and the action already taken, I cannot at this stage predict when, if at all. closure action will be necessary. Fisheries Departments will be monitoring the situation as closely as possible.

In the event that the fishery is closed prematurely the agreed arrangements for compensation, to which I referred in my reply of 17 July to theap j 13-5 hon. Member for Kingston-upon-Hull, West (Mr. Randall), will apply. We are exploring the possibility of obtaining additional opportunities for cod by means of a quota exchange from another member state but I can hold out no firm hope of this at this stage.

EC (Membership)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will bring up to date the information on the estimated return on capital given in table M of the memorandum submitted by Her Majesty's Government to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on the financial and economic consequences of United Kingdom membership of the European Communities (Session 1984-85, HC 57-II, page 56);

(2) whether he will bring up to date the information on average United Kingdom farm-gate prices given in Annex V to the memorandum submitted by Her Majesty's Government to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on the financial and economic consequences of United Kingdom membership of the European Communities (Session 1984-85, HC 57-II, page 53).

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will bring up to date the information on rent farm income on full-time farms given in table f1 of the memorandum submitted by Her Majesty's Government to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on the financial and economic consequences of the United Kingdom membership of the European Communities (Session 1984-85, HC 57-II page 38).

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is given in the tables.

Notes— Pairs of years relate to an identical sample of farms. A major break in series occurred in 1978-79. It is not, therefore possible to make a meaningful comparison of the two periods. A further break occurred in 1982-83. The major differences in the periods are:

	Geographical coverage	Breeding livestock stock appreciation	Farm size and type determination	Depreciation basis	Definition full-time farm	Mixed farms
1967-68 to 1970-71	England and Wales	Included in NFI	Standard man days	Historic cost	275 to 4100 SMD	Distinct type
1979-80 to 1982-83	England	Excluded from NFI	Standard gross margin	Current cost	4 to 250 ESU[1]	Included in all livestock

	Geographical coverage	Breeding livestock stock appreciation	Farm size and type determination	Depreciation basis	Definition full-time farm	Mixed farms
1982-83 to 1985-86	England	Excluded from NFI	Standard gross margin	Current cost	4 BSU[2] and above except farm types asterisked 4 to 250 BSU	Included in all livestock

[1] One ESU = 1000 EUA of standard gross margins at average 1972-74 values.
[2] One BSU = 2000 ECU of standard gross margins at average 1978-80 values.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Estimated expenditure is likely to be in the region of £1 million.

Oilseed Rape

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the production of oilseed rape in the United Kingdom in each of the past 10 years together with imports and exports of oilseed rape and rapeseed oil; and if he will include a figure of the cost to public funds each year of producing oilseed rape and rapeseed oil.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is as follows:

(3) Expenditure data from FEOGA financial reports relates to rapeseed except that until 1982 expenditure on production aid for other oilseeds is included. There is no separate FEOGA expenditure on rapeseed oil.

Agricultural Holdings

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of agricultural/horticultural holdings in multiple ownership and/or the number of farmers/horticulturalists with more than one holding; and if he will provide such figures as he has available to show the concentration of ownership in terms of land per person rather than size of individual holdings;

(2) whether he will bring up to date the information on the size and tenure of agricultural holdings given in the reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 22 July 1982, Official Report, column 252.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall write to the hon. Member.

EC (Expenditure)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each common agricultural policy product the amount of public money spent in 1986-87 on each hectare or livestock unit in the United Kingdom in direct subventions, storage, export rebates, and so on.

Mr. MacGregor: Expenditure in 1986-87 on market regulation under the CAP is summarised by principle commodity in table 28 of the "Annual Review of Agriculture 1987" (Cm. 67). Details of crop areas and livestock numbers are given in table 3 of Cm. 67.

Tomato Regime

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will bring up to date the information on the EEC tomato regime given in his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 8 May 1985, Official Report, column 453.

Mr. Donald Thompson: EEC production aid rates for tomato products are published in the Official Journal of the European Communities. Details for the marketing years 1985-86 and 1986-87 are listed in the following volumes which are in the Library of the House:

L205 of 3.8.85 (Regulation 2222/85);
L179 of 3.7.86 (Regulation 2077/86).

The cost to the Community budget for production aid for tomato products was 528·6 mecu in 1985-86 and 260·4 mecu in 1986-87. No surplus tomato products have been stored at Community expense.

The information in respect of fresh tomatoes is as follows:

Farm Rents and Land Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will bring up to date the information on farm rents given in the written reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby of 5 March 1982, Official Report, column 269; and if he will add figures for land prices.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The following table shows the average farm rents in England over the period 1961 to 1986 and average prices for agricultural land over the period 1961 to 1985, the latest years for which information is available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the years 1984-86 the production of Mediterranean products on the same basis as given in his written reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby dated 20 May 1985, Official Report, columns 346-47.

Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent by his Department on official hospitality in each of the last two financial years.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is as follows:

1985-86	38,000
1986-87	139,000

Expenditure in 1986-87 included £101,000 spent on hospitality as a direct result of the United Kingdom's presidency of the EEC.

Intervention (Expenditure)

Mr. Salmond asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce expenditure for the years (a) 1985-86 and (b) 1986-87 was devoted to (i) the storage of agricultural stocks, (ii) the purchase of agricultural commodities for intervention and (iii) other Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce expenditure.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Proportions of the Intervention Board's gross expenditure were:

	(a) 1985-86	(b) 1986-87 (provisional)
Gross expenditure	2,189,726	1,716,022
(i) Storage and related costs	124,595	128,521
(per cent. gross expenditure)	(5·7)	(7·5)

	(a) 1985-86	(b) 1986-87 (provisional)
(ii) Purchases	845,339	405,768
(per cent. gross expenditure)	(38·6)	(23·6)
(iii) Other expenditure	1,219,792	1,181,733
(per cent. gross expenditure)	(55·7)	(68·9)

Expenditure

Mr. Salmond asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of expenditure controlled by the Agricultural Departments is paid directly to producers; and if he will estimate what proportion of the total benefits of such spending accrues to (a) producers, (b) merchants and (c) processors.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The proportion of expenditure covered by the Supply Estimates (including administration costs) for the Agricultural Departments in 1986-87 which was paid directly to producers was of the order of 50 per cent. Other areas of expenditure such as that on animal disease, research, advice and education benefit producers although not paid directly to them. Some 15 per cent. of gross expenditure by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce in 1986-87 on market regulation under the CAP was paid to producers under the variable premium schemes for beef and sheep. Most other IBAP payments are to processors and traders. It is not possible to provide a detailed breakdown of the benefits of expenditure in terms of categories of beneficiaries.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the cost to the average British family with two children of support for agriculture in the United Kingdom and in the rest of the European Economic Community and world food prices.

Mr. MacGregor: Information on expenditure on agricultural support is not available in the form requested.

Imported Food Products

Mr. Amess asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on quality controls on imported food products.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There is no differentiation between quality controls (food labelling and food composition requirements) applied to imported food products or to home produced ones. Regulations are enforced by local authorities.

Organic Produce

Mr. Harris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any progress has been made in the development of production standards for organic produce; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The chairman of Food from Britain has informed me that his council has now agreed to establish on a voluntary basis a United Kingdom register of organic food standards (UKROFS). The tasks will be (i) to set production standards for organic produce tied to a United Kingdom organic logo and a voluntary code of production practice; (ii) to consider applications from organic sector bodies to check that their standards meet such minimum standards and are supported by adequate inspection arrangements; (iii) to establish a register of individual organic producers whereby registration provides a right to use the logo; (iv) to arrange for adequate monitoring of inspection arrangements and for the inspection of the farms of those producers not linked to a recognised organic sector body.

It is intended that UKROFS would be supervised on behalf of FFB by a board to be appointed by the council and that the operation should be largely self-funding and will not absorb any FFB funds. Detailed plans will now be drawn up by FFB in discussion with officials and a further announcement will be made later.

On behalf of Agriculture Ministers I should like to welcome this important development which, it is intended, will extend to the whole of the United Kingdom. We hope that domestic producers will seize the opportunities now being offered by the increased consumer demand for organic produce. For some time it has been recognised that the establishment of production standards for such produce was a key factor in such a development. I understand that the proposals now agreed by the FFB council in broad outline are likely to be consistent with proposals on organic production currently being developed by the EC Commission. It is our hope that these will lead eventually to the mutual recognition of national arrangements not only between member states but also involving third countries.

Farmed Deer

Mr. Curry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is yet in a position to respond to the report from the Farm Animal Welfare Council on the welfare of farmed deer.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have carefully considered this report, following the many comments which have been received. In the main, we agree with the recommendations from the council. In particular we accept the proposal that the slaughter of deer be permitted in abattoirs provided there are suitable safeguards. Full details are being sent out to all interested organisations and a copy of our responses has been placed in the Library of the House.

Food Labelling

Miss Emma Nicholson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to make regulations on the labelling of foods with their fat content, and to issue guidelines on the voluntary declaration of the nutrient content of food.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will consider introducing an official standard of labelling designed to provide consumers with nutritional information about dairy products.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Since we circulated our proposals for comment early in 1986, my officials have been in extensive discussions with the Commission of the European Communities about the compatibility of our proposals for fat content labelling with Community law. Those discussions are continuing. We had originally intended that guidelines for full nutrition labelling should be issued in parallel with fat content labelling regulations, but in view of the delay, and the increasing need for a standard approach in the market place to the provision of nutrition information on food labels, I have decided to issue now the guidelines for voluntary nutrition labelling of food. The final version of the guidelines takes account of the comments received on the draft circulated in February 1986.

It is my intention in the longer term that the form in which nutrition information provided voluntarily on food labels is given should be controlled by law, but it is sensible to defer any decisions on this until we have seen these guidelines in action for a while and we have more details of the EC Commission's known plans for a Community system of voluntary nutrition labelling. In the meantime, I commend the approach set out in the guidelines, particularly to food manufacturers and retailers responsible for nutrition labelling, in the interests of ensuring that consumers receive nutrition information in a standard form.

I am also circulating for comment proposals for minor amendments to the Food Labelling Regulations 1984 to ensure that those who voluntarily provide statements of the basic nutrient content of foods for the benefit of consumers do not offend against those provisions of the regulations which protect consumers against misleading claims. These proposals are being circulated to those organisations representative of interests which will be substantially affected by them, as required by the Food Act 1984.

I have arranged for copies of both documents to be placed in the Library of the House.

Pesticides

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in relation to the pesticide DDT, he will (a) give his estimate of the amount of DDT which is still held on farms in the United Kingdom, (b) make arrangements for the collection and safe disposal of any remaining stocks of DDT on farms in the United Kingdom and (c) issue advice to farmers on the safe disposal of any remaining stocks of DDT on farms in the United Kingdom; when he expects to produce a revised version of MAFF booklet 2198 on guidelines for the disposal of unwanted pesticides and containers on farms and holdings; and whether the revised booklet will be made available throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: There should be no significant stocks of products containing the pesticide DDT on farms in the United Kingdom. The last permitted use was withdrawn in October 1984 after extensive notice, and since 6 October 1986 it has been an offence to store or use any pesticide in Great Britain which does not have an approval under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. It is the responsibility of the owner to dispose safely of unwanted pesticides.

Advice on disposal is given both in general terms and in specific cases. Farmers can ask suppliers to take back surplus pesticide. If this is not practicable the local authority may be asked to collect the pesticide. If the local authority is unable to do so, the name of a private contractor will be available either from the local authority or from the National Association of Waste Disposal Contractors.

MAFF booklet 2198 on guidelines for the disposal of unwanted pesticides and containers on farms and holdings continues to be available while a statutory code of practice for Great Britain on the agricultural and horticultural use of pesticides is prepared under the provisions of part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. The Great Britain code will be generally available when it is published during 1988. A separate code will be made for Northern Ireland.

Air Pollution

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department is looking into the effects of air pollution on crop production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: My Department takes an interest in research into the effects of air pollution, including the effects on growing plants. However, results from the national air pollution monitoring network, and from other research, suggest that in general air pollution has no discernible effect upon agriculture.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total area of land which was referred to his Department by the Forestry Commission under the forestry grant consultation procedures for each of the years ended 31 March 1986 and 31 March 1987; and if he will list in the Official Report in respect of each of the area offices of his Ministry, the area of land which it advised was (a) acceptable to award forestry grant and (b) inappropriate to afforest on agricultural grounds.

Mr. Gummer: This information is not held centrally, and I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Sampson Report

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he intends to publish the findings of the Sampson report into the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) on 15 July. In keeping with normal practice with police reports of this kind, Mr. Sampson's report will not be published.

Medical Staff

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish figures showing average pay for speech therapists, clinical psychologists, biochemists, physicists, hospital pharmacists and opticians in Northern Ireland for the last five years.

Mr. Needham: Information is not readily available in the form requested but the maximum point on the basic salary scale for staff employed by Health and Social Services boards in each of the professions was as follows:

	1982	1984	1985	1986
Speech Therapists	6,074	6,353	6,659	7,056
Clinical Psychologists	8,349	8,725	9,432	9,996

	1982	1984	1985	1986
Biochemists	8,349	8,725	9,432	9,996
Physicists	8,349	8,725	9,432	9,996
Pharmacists	8,096	8,438	8,835	10,344
Ophthalmic Opticians	8,220	8,590	8,990	9,529

There has not yet been a pay settlement for any of these professions for the current year.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what pay awards were made in the current year to each of the graduate professions within the National Health Service; and what representations he has received since these awards.

Mr. Needham: A pay award of 8·25 per cent. has been made in the current year to hospital and community medical and dental staff. Pay increases for other graduate professions have not been agreed yet. No representations have been received.

General Election (Voting)

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from individuals who were unable to vote in the recent general election because they did not have one of the prescribed documents; and whether he plans to make any modifications to the list of prescribed documents required before issue of a ballot paper.

Mr. Stanley: The Northern Ireland Office is not aware of any such representations other than in two letters received from the hon. Member. I understand, however, that a number of representations have been made to the Chief Electoral Officer. We have no current plans for changes to the list of specified documents, but we are reviewing the arrangements in the light of recent experience.

Special Education

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his policy on providing for the special educational needs of pupils in schools, and the advice given by his Department to education and library boards as to how they should best meet these needs; and how many children in each of the education and library boards have been assessed as having special educational needs.

Dr. Mawhinney: Articles 6 and 32 of the Education and Libraries (NI) Order 1986 place the duty of meeting the special educational needs of pupils in schools on the education and library boards.

Detailed advice was issued to Education and Library Boards in DENI Circular 1987/21, "Education and Children with Special Educational Needs". I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Figures are not yet available of the numbers of children assessed as having special educational needs. The latest available figures relate to pupils determined as handicapped at January 1986 and are shown in the following table.

Education and Library Board	Number of pupils
Belfast	1,309
Western	823
North-Eastern	790
South-Eastern	840
Southern	437
Total	4,197

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional resources have been provided by his Department to meet the special educational needs of children in Northern Ireland schools; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: As a result of the provisions of the Education (NI) Order 1987 transferring from 1 April 1987, responsibility for the education of mentally handicapped children to the Education sector, £4 million capital funding has initially been made available for new and improved accommodation and a further £2·8 million has been provided for additional recurrent expenditure.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy towards the provision of higher education for children over the age of 16 years with special educational needs; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government's policy is that the educational provision made in institutions of further and higher education in Northern Ireland should be available, where practicable, to young people with special educational needs who have the capacity, motivation and maturity to benefit from the courses provided.

Community Employment Schemes

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of people employed in action for community employment schemes.

Mr. Viggers: 5,850 (at end of June 1987).

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what targets for numbers employed under action for community employment schemes have been set for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Viggers: The target in both years is to achieve an average of 6,200 in employment under the scheme.

Disabled People

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether there is a 3 per cent. quota rule for employing registered disabled workers in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: Yes, such a quota applies for employers with 20 or more workers.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) disabled people and (b) registered disabled people are employed in action for community employment schemes in Northern Ireland; and what percentage this represents.

Mr. Viggers: 47 disabled people are currently employed under ACE. It is not known how many of those are registered disabled. This represents 0·8 per cent of ACE employees.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland about the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I last met Irish Ministers at a meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference on 16 July. As is set out in the joint statement issued after the meeting, a copy of which is in the Library, we discussed a range of matters within the field of activity of the conference, including security and economic co-operation and equality of opportunity in employment.

Employment Equality

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the joint statement by the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 16 July in London, promising affirmative action to promote employment equality in Northern Ireland, applies to (a) companies registered in Northern Ireland, (b) companies registered in the Republic of Ireland and trading with Northern Ireland and (c) companies registered in Great Britain and trading within Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: My right hon. Friend announced on 15 July that a new guide to the effective practice of equality of opportunity in employment would be published in September. It will provide guidance on affirmative action for all employers in Northern Ireland, regardless of a company's place of registration.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will be consulting disablement organisations in Northern Ireland to ascertain their views as to when it would be appropriate to introduce the provisions of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Consultations are currently under way with Health and Social Services and education and library boards.

Initial comments on the Act have also been invited from the Northern Ireland Council on Disability which acts as an umbrella organisation for voluntary groups concerned with the disabled.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Viggers: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

ACE Programme

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is satisfied that the management and monitoring of the ACE programme in Northern Ireland is appropriate.

Mr. Viggers: Yes.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement indicating whether, pursuant to his interim statement on 15 July, Official Report, column 490-1, on equality of opportunity in employment, there will be further consideration given to these issues particularly in respect of those with disabilities and in relation to sex discrimination.

Mr. Viggers: Yes, arrangements are being made for meetings with key interest groups, including the Equal Opportunity Commission and the Northern Ireland Council on Disability.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement indicating what representations were received from or on behalf of the Northern Ireland Council on Disability on Equality of Opportunity in Employment and the Government's response to these to date; and what plans exist for further consideration of or consultations on the matters raised by the Northern Ireland Council on Disability.

Mr. Viggers: The Northern Ireland Council on Disability made a submission dated 31 March 1987 in response to the consultative paper "Equality of Opportunity in Employment in Northern Ireland." In the period to 6 July 1987, eight right hon. and hon. Members have written to urge that consideration be given to the Council's views. Right hon. and hon. Members were assured that the fullest consideration would be given to the Northern Ireland Council on Disability's views, consistent with the necessity to take account of all the views put forward in response to the consultative paper. To allow further discussion of their submission, a meeting between the Northern Ireland Council on Disability and departmental officials has been arranged for mid-August.

Security Statistics

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the security statistics for the second half of 1986 are now available, together with details of persons charged with terrorist-type activities and convictions for scheduled offences for the year.

Statistics on security (Part III)—July-December 1986

Notes on the tables:

(1) The offence classifications are based on those used by the Crown and Peace Office in their annual return.
(2) The tables relate to persons convicted at the Belfast Crown Court. This covers all scheduled offences tried on indictment.
(3) Some jury trials are included in cases where the Attorney General certified out of the scheduled mode of trial, ie non-terrrorist serious offences.
(4) Where a person had been convicted of more than one offence only the most serious or that which received the longest sentence is recorded in the statistics.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements exist for the training of teachers in respect of meeting special educational needs in Northern Ireland; how many teachers in Northern Ireland are currently qualified to teach children with special educational needs; and what changes he plans in this provision.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: All courses of initial teacher training include tuition on the identification and handling of pupils with learning difficulties. In addition specialist training for teachers wishing to concentrate in this field is available by means of the Department's in service training support scheme. There are no plans for change in current provision but the Department of Education will continue to build on its programme of in service training to ensure the Province's needs continue to be met.

The information on qualified teachers is not available in the form requested but there are 504 full-time teachers serving in special schools and 803 teachers in receipt of a special class allowance in primary and secondary schools.

Education Costs

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent by local authorities on (a) school transport and (b) school meals in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the comparable figures for each year since 1978-79 in cash terms and real terms using 1986-87 prices and using an index of 100 for 1978-79.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: Expenditure by the education and library boards for the years in question is as follows:

Year	School transport			School milk and meals[1]
	Cash £000's	Real terms £000's	Index	Cash £000's	Real terms £000's	Index

[1] Expenditure figures for school milk and meals are not recorded separately.

Land Restoration (Grants)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what was the total expenditure by way of grant-aid under the agriculture improvement scheme on land restoration in the Province, in the financial years 1985-86 and 1986-87; and whether such grants are paid in respect of heathland and moorland.

Mr. Viggers [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: The information is:

1985-86	Nil
1986-87	6,600

Grant is not paid in respect of heathland and moorland.

Farm Wastes (Pollution)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidents of water pollution by farm wastes were recorded in each of the years 1980 to 1986, and in 1987 to date, in Northern Ireland; how many of these incidents were attributable to pollution by sileage effluent, and by slurry; and how many of these incidents were the subject of warning letters and prosecutions.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: The table gives details of recorded water pollution incidents arising from agriculture sources for the years 1980 to 1986 inclusive. The figures show the action taken by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland for those cases referred to it for consideration for prosecution under the Water Act (Northern Ireland) 1972. The Foyle Fisheries Commission and the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland have taken prosecution action under the Foyle Fisheries Act (Northern Ireland) 1952 or the Fisheries Act (Northern Ireland) 1966 respectively in each of those years but no information is readily available on the pollution sources. Figures for 1987 incidents are based on incomplete returns for the first quarter.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Butler asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make a statement on the operation of the opt-out proposals on Welsh-medium education.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We shall be publishing shortly a consultative document seeking views on our proposals for grant maintained schools. These proposals will apply equally to Welsh medium schools.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales in which circumstances local planning authorities may consider the Welsh language as a factor in decisons relating to planning permission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Local planning authorities are required in dealing with a planning application to have regard to the provisions of the development plan, so far as these are material to the application, and to any other material considerations. Policies which relate to the character and way of life of a community, including the needs and interests of the Welsh language, may properly be among the provisions or considerations material to an application.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has given to local planning authorities on the consideration of the Welsh language as a factor in decisions relating to planning permission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: None.

Land Authority for Wales

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the profit achieved by the Land Authority for Wales on the nine most successful transactions in the three years to 31 March 1985; and how that compares with each other group of nine transactions in order of profitability in the same period.

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if, in the light of the critical comments made in the recent Public Accounts Committee report on some of the activities of the Land Authority for Wales, he intends to review the future activities of the authority and to investigate ways by which it can be made more effective and accountable; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if, in the light of the recent recommendation by the Public Accounts Committee that the Land Authority for Wales should review the extent to which developers may be profiting disproportionately from the authority's activities, he will take steps to ensure that, in its dealings with the Cwmbran development corporation over the next few months, the authority will work closely with Torfaen borough council; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if, in the light of the conclusions of the recent Public Accounts Committee report on the Land Authority for Wales, he will investigate means by which the authority will work more closely with local planning authorities in Wales in future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I expect to receive shortly the Report of a comprehensive Financial Management and Policy review of the Land Authority for Wales. I shall be giving careful consideration to the future of the Authority and its role in the light of the findings of the review.

Domestic Rates

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average domestic rate paid in each Welsh district in the current financial year; and what is the estimated community charge in each Welsh district (a) per person and (b) per property.

Mr. Peter Walker: Average domestic bills, calculated as the estimated contribution made by domestic ratepayers to authorities' rate fund expenditure in 1987-88 (after allowing for domestic rate relief) divided by the number of hereditaments, are given in the following table. Estimated community charge figures for 1987-88 are also shown. These estimates are based on present expenditure patterns and aggregate levels of grant. They are given on two bases: first, community charges assuming the Government's proposals were implemented in full in 1987-88, with no safety net, are provided; secondly, charges after allowing for the safety nets envisaged in the Green Paper. The average community charge per property including safety net will, by definition, be the same as the average domestic rate bill per property.

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total annual value of domestic rate relief accruing to registered charities in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Registered charities are rated on a commercial basis and do not, therefore, qualify for domestic rate relief. However, they are eligible for 50 per cent. mandatory relief under Section 40(1) of the General Rate Act 1967, and for 1986-87 this amounted to £1·2 million.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by speciality, the number of people awaiting non-emergency operations and treatment in the Pembrokeshire health district together with average waiting time in each specialty; and how these figures compare with the average for (a) Wales and (b) England.

Mr. Grist: The number of persons waiting for in-patient or day-care admission to hospitals of the Pembrokeshire Health Authority at 31 March 1987 were as follows:

	In-Patients	Day-Cases
General Surgery	1,534	230
Ear, Nose and Throat	—	48
Traumatic and Orthopaedic Surgery	789	470
Opthalmology	—	9
Dental Surgery	—	99
Orthodontics	—	48
Gynaecology	187	94

Information on median waiting times is derived only for a limited range of specialties which have relatively large numbers of patients admitted to hospital from waiting lists. The latest available information, which is provisional for 1986, is as follows:

Median waiting time (days) for in-patients and day-cases admitted from waiting lists during 1986

	Pembrokeshire	Wales
General Surgery (including Urology)	61	36
Traumatic and Orthopaedic Surgery	70	66
Gynaecology	37	38

Information relating to waiting times in England is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and Social Services.

Coal Industry

Mr. Win Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by county for each year, since and including 1976, the opencast coalmining applications that have been considered by him on appeal, and the result of those appeals in each case.

Mr. Grist: No opencast coalmining planning applications have been considered on appeal by my right hon. Friend, from and including 1976, in respect of the counties of Clwyd, Gwynedd, Powys and South Glamorgan. Details of appeals for the other counties are given in the following table:

Nuclear Accident Response Unit

Mr. Win Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he was informed of the existence of a nuclear accident response unit at Saint Athan when it was established there.

Mr. Grist: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to discuss the roles of particular units which may be involved in a response to an accident involving defence nuclear material.

Local Government Staff

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by Welsh county and district authority the number of full-time and full-time equivalent staff employed in each of the last 10 years, together with the percentage increase or decrease over the preceding year.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information held by the Department regarding full-time and part-time employees for each year is set out in the following tables. No information on employees by individual authorities is held by the Department prior to December 1978. Information on the number of full-time equivalent employees is not held by the Department and it is not possible to apply national factors to convert part-time employees to full-time equivalent terms.

Figures for Police authorities, Probation and Aftercare committees and Magistrates Courts are separately identified in the tables and are excluded from the county council totals.

Rating Reforms

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the likely cost of introducing the community charge in Wales, during the transition period, including the recruitment of staff, the installation of computer systems, extra furniture and fittings and the initial canvass.

Mr. Peter Walker: No estimate has been made but an assessment of costs will be considered in due course in discussion with the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance.

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what would be the total community charge for 1987-88 payable per resident in all boroughs and districts in Wales, assuming the full replacement of domestic rates by community charge, the implementation of the proposals in "Paying for Local Government" and the full payment of community charge by (a) 95 per cent., (b) 90 per cent., (c) 85 per cent. and (d) 81 per cent. of those eligible, both with and without the safety net.

Mr. Peter Walker: Estimates are given in the following table:

Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent on official hospitality by his Department in each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Peter Walker: The following amounts were spent on official hospitality:

1985-86	35,466·63
1986-87	29,930·00

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Peter Walker: £100,000.

Conservative Party Organisation (Press Release)

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for Wales why he authorised the use of an official departmental press release to announce the appointment of an hon. Member to advise him on matters relating to Conservative party organisation in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: I authorised the issue on 16 July of an official Departmental press release to announce the appointment of my hon. Friend the Member for Hereford (Mr. Shepherd) as my parliamentary private secretary. I also took the opportunity to announce that other Welsh Members had been asked by me to specialise in a number of issues affecting Wales. I thought it right to explain that my hon. Friend the Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan) was not included in these tasks because he had taken on duties of a party political nature—none of the details of which were given in the press notice. It would perhaps have been better for the reference to my hon. Friend the Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan) to have been mentioned in a separate press release issued by myself. I have therefore arranged to reimburse the Department for the cost of the Release.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Wales what instructions have been given by his Department to the National Museum of Wales about the circumstances in which permission should be sought from his Department to raise funds voted for museum purposes.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [pursuant to his reply, 10 July 1987, c. 291-2]: The terms on which the grant in aid voted for the National Museum of Wales may be drawn down are contained in the museum's financial memorandum, a copy of which is available in the Library. Changes made subsequent to the issue of the present financial memorandum will be incorporated in a revised version which is now in preparation.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales in respect of land within environmentally sensitive areas, how many farmers have applied to enter into management agreements in each of these areas and what is the total area of land involved; and how many agreements have so far been concluded with farmers in each of these areas, and what is the total area of land involved.

Mr. Peter Walker [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: There have been 150 applicants to enter management agreements in the Cambrian mountains ESA. Until the applications are finalised the area of land involved cannot be assessed. Five agreements have so far been concluded involving 817 hectares.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the extent in hectares of the Cambrian mountains environmentally sensitive area, the total area of agricultural land within the environmentally sensitive area, and an estimate of the number of farmers eligible to enter into management agreements in that area.

Mr. Peter Walker [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: The Cambrian mountains ESA covers 72,800 hectares of which 53,900 hectares is agricultural land excluding woodland. About 400 farmers are likely to be eligible for management agreements.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total area of land which was referred to the Welsh Office Agriculture Department by the Forestry Commission under the forestry grant consultation procedures for each of the years ended 31 March 1986 and 31 March 1987; and if he will list in the Official Report in respect of each of the area offices of his Department the area of land which it advised was (a) acceptable to award forestry grant and (b) inappropriate to afforest on agricultural grounds.

Mr. Peter Walker [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: The information is as follows:

1985-86	Area acceptable (hectares)	Area inappropriate for forestry (hectares)
Divisional Office
Caernarfon (Gwynedd)	68	—
Cardiff (Glamorgans and Gwent)	102	—

Planning Appeals

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 17 July, he will list those planning permissions granted for residential housing developments on appeal in each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist [pursuant to my reply, 23 July 1987]: A list of those planning permissions granted for residential housing developments, on appeal, in each year since 1979 has been placed in the Library of the House.

Education Costs

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish a table showing the amount spent by local authorities on (a) school transport and (b) school meals in the latest year for which figures are available; and what are the comparable figures for each year since 1978-79 in cash terms using 1986-87 prices and using an index of 100 for 1978-79.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: The information requested is as follows:

1. School transport (gross expenditure).

Year	£000 cash	£000 1986-87 prices	Index 1978-79 = 100
1978-79	12,679	24,652	100

EMPLOYMENT

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Rees asked the Secretary of State for Employment for how many people on the job training scheme placements have been found with employers.

Mr. Cope: I regret that this information is not yet available.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will require Manpower Services Commission to monitor, record and publish by area the number of disabled people who (a) apply for and (b) secure a place on the job training scheme.

Mr. Cope: I have no plans for an increase in the information about participation by disabled people in the job training scheme, which is described in my reply of 13 July 1987, at column 348, to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley), but I will be keeping this matter under review. Applications for a place on the scheme come from a number of different sources including restart interviews, jobcentres and self referral and collecting information about their characteristics would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether statistical information, including lists of all practical work experience provided with trainees allocated to them, will be made available to area manpower board representatives of trade unions which have indicated their hostility to the job training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Statistical information about the operation of the new job training scheme is presented to the Manpower Services Commission's area manpower boards each month. At its meeting on 23 July the commission agreed that it should change this procedure so far as the provision of lists of practical experience placements is concerned.

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to occasions when Open Tech unit staff have withdrawn their support for the job training scheme as a result of instructions from local education authorities opposed to job training scheme; what action he has taken or proposes to take in those circumstances; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: There have been no occasions when staff of the Manpower Services Commission's open learning branch (formerly the open tech unit) have taken any action involving withdrawal of support for the job training scheme. My hon. Friend may be referring to the now independent organisations established under the open tech programme (which was completed on 31 March 1987). MSC initiated these organisations by contracting with LEAs, among other bodies. Under these contracts, which are now at an end, LEA staff sold and supported open learning materials under the title open tech delivery project. I would deplore directions issued by LEAs about withdrawing support from the scheme.

Community Programme Wage Levels

Mrs. Fyfe asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will undertake a review of the community programme wage levels.

Mr. Lee: We keep under review the maximum level of wages which can be reimbursed under the community programme and make changes when this would improve the cost-effective use of taxpayers' money. There are no plans at present to increase the maximum level of wages for participants.

Rehabilitation Centres

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of clients who attend employment rehabilitation centres between November 1986 and 31 March 1987 were able-bodied.

Mr. Lee: Figures for this precise period are not available. However, for the period 1 October 1986 to 31 March 1987 the percentage of able-bodied people attending employment rehabilitation centres was 7·6 per cent.

Manpower Services Commission

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider increasing the representation of the voluntary organisations on the Manpower Services Commission following the decision by the Government to reduce trade union representation.

Mr. Fowler: I have no plans to reduce trade union representation on the Manpower Services Commission, but I will consider my hon. Friend's suggestions.

Benfleet Water Tower, Essex (Installations)

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for Employment when the assessment by the Health and Safety Executive as to field strengths of the 600mm microwave dishes and sundry antennae installed at Benfleet water tower, Essex, and their possible effect on public health was completed; what were the findings; and why these have not yet been made public.

Mr. Cope: The assessment by the Health and Safety Executive has not yet been completed.

Radio Frequency and Microwave Radiation

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Secretary of State for Employment what action has been taken or is now proposed regarding the recommendation of the National Radiological Protection Board that standards of permissible exposure of humans to radio frequency and microwave radiation should be revised; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The National Radiological Protection Board is re-examining the proposals contained in its consultative document on possible standards of protection in this field. It expects to report further on this topic in due course, taking account of the comments made on the consultative document and recent consultation with the Medical Research Council on the biological effects of radio frequency and microwave radiation.

CIMAH Small Inventory Top Tier Sites

Mr. Bill Michie asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the Health and Safety Executive's estimate for the number of CIMAH small inventory top tier sites; and for how many CIMAH small inventory top tier sites the plans required by CIMAH regulation 11 are prepared or in preparation.

Mr. Cope: At 31 March 1987, the Health and Safety Executive was aware of 66 premises which appeared to meet the criteria laid down for small inventory top tier sites. To date, the HSE has confirmed that 29 sites attract regulations 7 to 12 of the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations 1984. Of these, 12 have off-site plans completed or in preparation. Inspectors are continuing to check sites for potential risks.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the percentage unemployment in each parliamentary constituency at 11 June.

Mr. Lee: My Department calculates unemployment rates for self-contained labour market areas only; the smallest such areas are travel-to-work areas.

Sir Barney Hayhoe asked the Secretary of State for Employment what change has taken place since August 1985 in the unemployment figures for the Brentford and Isleworth constituency; and when was the last time that the figures were at the present level.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 8 August 1985, the number of unemployed claimants in the Brentford and Isleworth constituency was 4,349. On 11 June 1987, the number was 3,524, which was the lowest total since unemployment figures for parliamentary constituencies were introduced in June 1983. The comparison is affected by minor changes in the coverage of the data.

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Leeds, West have been employed in (a) service industries and (b) manufacturing industries for each of the last four years.

Mr. Lee: The latest available estimates for the Leeds, West constituency, from the census of employment, indicate that at September 1984 there were 13,300 employees in employment in service industries and 7,900 in manufacturing industries. An industry breakdown for parliamentary constituencies from the previous 1981 census of employment was not produced.

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of job vacancies in Leeds, West for the latest date available.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the library. Vacancy statistics are not available by parliamentary constituency as such. However, the Leeds, West constituency corresponds to most of the Bramley jobcentre area and part of the Leeds jobcentre area, and at these jobcentres there were 213 and 1,710 unfilled vacancies, respectively, on 6 June 1987. Vacancies at jobcentres do not represent the total number of vacancies in the economy. Estimates suggest that nationally about a third of all vacancies are notified to jobcentres, but equivalent local estimates are not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the numbers of persons employed by (a) banks, (b) building societies, (c) estate agents and (d) lawyers; and if he has comparable information on the Federal Republic of West Germany.

Mr. Lee: The Department's employment statistics are classified according to the 1980 standard industrial classification, which does not separately identify building societies. The latest available estimates of the numbers of employees in employment in banking and bill-discounting and house and estate agents are for March 1987. Quarterly estimates of employees in employment in legal services are not made; the latest available is from the September 1984 census of employment.

The available information for Great Britain is as follows.

Employees in Employment: Great Britain

	Numbers
AH 8140[1] Banking and bill-discounting	[2]407,000
AH 8340[1] House and estate agents	[2]102,000
AH 8350[1] Legal services	[3]141,000

[1] Activity Heading of the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification.
[2] March 1987.
[3] September 1984.

The latest readily available figures for the Federal Republic of Germany are less detailed and show that in 1984 1,593,000 employees (7 per cent. of all employees) in the Federal Republic worked in banking and finance, business services and renting. Banking and finance accounted for 37 per cent. of this total.

Accident Statistics

Mr. Barry Field asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the statistics for accidents among local government employees over the last five years; and what information he has on rates of accidents in comparable activities in the private sector.

Mr. Cope: The table gives the available information.

Reported Occupational Injuries to Employees in Local Government Service, Great Britain[1]

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Fatal injuries	14	13	11	10	8
Major injuries	1,006	852	987	876	867
Over 3-day accidents	41,848	40,278	..	..	..

[1] As defined in the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 and reported to relevant enforcing authorities.

.. not available, because the industrial injury benefit scheme, which was the source of this information, effectively ceased in April 1983.

The category of employees in local government service is as defined in MLH 906 of the 1968 standard industrial classification. Information for comparable activities within the private sector could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Data collected under the new reporting regulations, which came into force in April 1986 are not yet available.

AIDS

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to provide protection for AIDS carriers against unfair dismissal by employers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Under the existing employment protection legislation, most employees, including AIDS sufferers, who believe they have been dismissed unfairly may complain to an industrial tribunal, providing they have completed two years' continuous employment with their employer.

Jobclub Places

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to remove the current six-month period of ineligibility for jobclub places which applies to persons who have just completed a 12-month placement on a community programme scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Many community programme managing agents and sponsers already do a great deal to help participants find permanent jobs. In addition, I have asked the Manpower Services Commission to explore new ways of doing this and a number of different pilot projects will be tested in the autumn. Access to jobclubs will be an important element of the pilot projects.

Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Employment how much has been spent by his Department on official hospitality in each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Cope: £22,000 in 1985-86 and £31,000 in 1986-87.

Industrial Injury

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Employment what number of days were lost due to industrial injury for each year from 1975 to 1986 inclusive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The table shows the estimated number of days of certified incapacity resulting from compensated industrial accidents. This information is available only up to April 1983 when industrial injury benefit was effectively abolished.

Year (June to May)	Number of days (millions)
1974-75	14·9
1975-76	n.a.
1976-77	14·5

1979-80	12·8
1980-81	10·6
1981-82	10·5
1982-83[1]	9·3

[1] Year ending 31 March 1983.
Note Figures for 1975-76 are not available.

Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of (a) improvement and (b) prohibition notices issued under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the number of prosecutions for breach of the Act and associated regulations by the Health and Safety Commission for each year from 1975 to 1986.

Mr. Cope: The table shows the available information for 1975 to 1985. Data for 1986 are not yet available.

Year	Number of: (a) improvement notices	(b) prohibition notices	(c) prosecutions (cases heard)
1975	5,149	2,450	1,588
1976	7,499	2,534	1,327
1977	9,253	3,130	1,623
1978	12,217	3,434	1,671
1979	13,517	3,674	1,373
1980	12,625	3,238	1,443
1981	12,321	3,185	1,260
1982	13,034	3,266	1,427
1983	12,268	3,805	1,366
1984	12,237	3,737	1,269
1985	11,052	3,479	1,286

(a), (b) all improvement and prohibition notices, including those issued by local authorities.

(c) prosecutions taken by enforcing authorities, excluding those taken by local authorities.

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those responsibilities set out in regulations made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 which are enforced by local authorities; and if he will give the dates when these responsibilities were given.

Mr. Cope: Under the Health and Safety (Enforcing Authority) Regulations 1977, local authorities are responsible for enforcing all relevant statutory provisions, as defined in section 53 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, in premises where the main activity is one specified in schedule 1 to the Health and Safety (Enforcing Authority) Regulations 1977, subject to certain exceptions set out in regulation 4. These regulations came into operation on 1 June 1977. Schedule 1 was amended by regulations which came into operation on 29 December 1980 and 1 October 1985.

Factories Act 1961

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether there are any provisions under negotiation with the European Economic Community regarding health and safety at work which will affect the provisions of section 14 of the Factories Act 1961; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The European Commission is preparing a proposal for a directive to harmonise the laws of the member states relating to the safety of machines. The proposal is not yet in its final form and so negotiations at Council of Ministers level have not yet begun. The Government are being advised on the health and safety aspects of the proposal by the Health and Safety Commission. When the European Commission has completed its proposal it will be published in the Official Journal of the European Communities and will be available for consideration by the appropriate Select Committee of this House in the usual way.

It does seem likely that the European Commission's proposal will have a bearing on section 14 of the Factories Act, but this remains to be seen.

Manual Handling

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what progress has been made in producing a code of regulations dealing with the problem of manual handling following publication of the consultative document in 1982; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to remove the anomaly whereby agricultural workers are subject to a lifting limit of 170 lb, textile workers 120 lb, and other workers to reasonable loads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Health and Safety Commission has set up a working group to prepare revised proposals on manual handling at work, in the light of the considerable volume of comment received on its 1982 proposals. The working group is considering the anomalous limits in earlier health and safety legislation.

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many accidents resulting in time off work were caused by manual handling in each year from 1980 to 1986 and in 1987 to the most recent practicable date.

Mr. Cope: The available information is for accidents described as "over exertion, strenuous or awkward movements and free bodily motion" and is shown in the table.

Year	Major injuries[1] to employees reported to Her Majesty's Factory Inspectors	All reported injuries[2] to employees in manufacturing and construction industry
1981	517	44,710
1982	417	39,904

1984	396	n/a
1985	388	n/a

[1] As defined in the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1980.

[2] Injuries resulting in more than three days absence from work and where industrial injury benefit was claimed.

n/a = Not available, because the industrial injury benefit scheme effectively ceased in April 1983.

Noise

Mr. Cryer asked the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made in producing regulations on the subject of noise at work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Health and Safety Commission intends to publish consultative proposals within the next six months for regulations on this subject to be made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974.

Underground Fires

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many outbreaks of fire below ground and withdrawals of men due to smoke were reported in small licensed coal mines in 1986-87.

Mr. Cope: There were no incidents reported in 1986-87.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many outbreaks of fire below ground and withdrawals of men due to smoke were reported in British Coal Corporation collieries in 1986-87.

Mr. Lee: Nineteen incidents were reported during 1986-87.

Collieries (Statistics)

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many major injury accidents to persons on British Coal Corporation colliery books were reported in 1986-87.

Mr. Cope: There were 843 major injury accidents recorded at British Coal collieries in 1986-87.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many part I and part II dangerous occurrences were reported in British Coal Corporation collieries in the years 1976, 1977, 1978, 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984-85 and 1985-86, respectively.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is listed as follows:

	Number
1976	[1]201
1977	[1]201
1978	[1]201
1979	226
1980	197
1981	256

	Number
1982	311
1983	328
1984-85[2]	222
1985-86	272

[1] Average.
[2] 15-month period including a period of industrial action.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many part I and part II dangerous occurrences were reported in small licensed coal mines in 1986-87.

Mr. Cope: There was one part I dangerous occurrence and five part II dangerous occurrences reported in 1986-87.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many part I and part II dangerous occurrences were reported in British Coal Corporation collieries in 1986-87.

Mr. Cope: There were 24 part I dangerous occurrrences and 338 part II dangerous occurences reported in 1986-87.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the major injury accident rate per 100,000 manshifts to persons on colliery books, reported in 1986-87 in British Coal Corporation collieries.

Mr. Cope: The major injury accident rate at British Coal collieries in 1986-87 was 3·05 per 100,000 manshifts.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library an analysis of all the major injury accidents to persons on British Coal Corporation colliery books that were reported in 1986-87.

Mr. Cope: The information is not yet available. Publications containing the information required will be placed in the Library as soon as they become available.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the major injury accident rate per 100,000 manshifts in British Coal Corporation collieries and to persons not on British Coal Corporation colliery books, but working at British Coal Corporation collieries, reported in 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87, respectively.

Mr. Lee: Information is available only for those persons on British Coal Colliery books and it was as follows:

Year	Per 100,000 manshifts
1981-82	1·69
1982-83	1·69
1983-84	1·82
1984-85	1·43
1985-86	1·94
1986-87	3·05

It is not possible to supply rates for those persons not on colliery books.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the major injury accident rate per 100,000 manshifts in British Coal Corporation collieries to persons not on colliery books in 1986-87.

Mr. Cope: It is not possible to provide rates for those persons not on colliery books.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many major injury accidents in British Coal Corporation collieries affecting persons not on colliery books were reported in 1986-87.

Mr. Cope: Eighty-seven major injury accidents were reported in 1986-87.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many fatalities and major injury accidents were reported in small licensed coal mines in 1986-87.

Mr. Lee: Fifty-two major injury accidents and three fatal accidents were reported in 1986-87.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the following information in respect of each major injury accident occurring in 1986-87 to persons on British Coal Corporation colliery books (a) location, distinguishing between underground or surface, (b) occupation of accident victims, (c) location in colliery and site of accident, (d) time and date of accident and (e) brief description of accident.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested. It could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment what effect the introduction of the Riddor regulations has had on the number of part I and part II dangerous occurrences reported in British Coal Corporation collieries.

Mr. Cope: In British coal mines 24 dangerous occurrences were reported in 1986-87 under part I of RIDDOR. Two of these are attributable to the effect of RIDDOR, one being a new category and one transferred from part II.

Two hundred and thirty eight dangerous occurrences were reported under part II of RIDDOR; 106 incidents were in new categories introduced by RIDDOR; seven accidents were reported which would have been dangerous occurrences under part II of the previous reporting arrangements.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment what effect the introduction of the Riddor regulations has had on the number of major injury accidents reported in the coal industry.

Mr. Cope: There were 982 major injury accidents in 1986-87 in coal mines, compared with 732 major injury accidents in 1985-86, representing an increase of 34·2 per cent.

Of the 982 accidents reported in 1986-87, 295 (representing 30.04 per cent.) were estimated to be due to the effects of RIDDOR.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Employment what effect the introduction of the Riddor regulations has had on the number of part I and part II dangerous occurrences reported in small licensed coal mines.

Mr. Cope: In 1986-87 at licensed coal mines there was one dangerous occurrence reported under part I of RIDDOR and five dangerous occurrences under part II. The one incident in part I was attributable to the introduction of RIDDOR. The five incidents under part II would have been reported under the previous arrangements.

Tourist Grant (Kidderminster)

Mr. Anthony Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will ensure that the proposed application for tourist grant, via the English Tourist Board, for a hotel, conference and leisure complex in Kidderminster, will be dealt with expeditiously.

Mr. Lee: Yes. The English Tourist Board always aims to deal with applications for section 4 assistance as quickly and efficiently as possible.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Cope: The estimated expenditure in the Department of Employment group in 1987-88 on management and computer consultancy is £3·1 million.

Small Businesses

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on present initiatives to help small businesses.

Mr. Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 20 July at columns 3-5 which set out some of the recent and current initiatives being pursued by my Department as part of its assistance to small businesses.

Hotel Classifications

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to require the availability either of 24-hour room service or of mini-bar facilities to be featured in hotel classifications.

Mr. Cope: This is a matter for the English Tourist Board. However, I understand that the availability of 24-hour room service is one of the requirements for a hotel to be awarded five crowns under the English Tourist Board's crown classification scheme.

Professional and Executive Register

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Employment when Her Majesty's Government intend to privatise the Professional and Executive Register: if opportunities will be provided to outside organisations and companies to bid for it; and what was the financial performance of the Professional and Executive Register in the more recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Fowler [pursuant to his reply, 21 July 1987, c. 165]: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Paymaster General said earlier this year, the Government have "no present plans to change the basis of operation of the service but its future is kept under review".

According to provisional accounts PER bettered its objective of recovering all its expenditure from fee income by some £37,000 in 1986-87.

Wider Opportunities Training Programme

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will state the amount of money by which the funding of the wider opportunities training programme is to be reduced, when this reduction will start, how many places in the programme will be lost and what is his estimate as to how many places in the programme will be lost and what is his estimate as to how many of the places lost will be for women and how many for men.

Mr. Cope [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: We have no present plans to reduce either the funding of the wider opportunities training programme (WOTP) or the number of places for men or women.

Youth Training

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will detail the number and percentage of youth opportunities programme and youth training scheme graduates who (a) gain employment, (b) go on to further training, (c) return to (i) full-time and (ii) part-time education, (d) become unemployed and (e) went on to other destinations for each of the last 10 years; and if these dates can be further analysed by social class of the graduate's parents.

Mr. Cope [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: Information is not available in the precise form requested.

The information on the destination of trainees after leaving the youth opportunities programme or youth training scheme is given in the table. The figures relating to the youth opportunities programme are taken from a postal follow-up survey of trainees, conducted 12 months after they joined the programme. Information on the youth training scheme is taken from a regular postal follow-up survey, covering 15 per cent. of leavers. From April 1985 the survey was extended to cover all (100 per cent.) youth training scheme leavers.

[2] Figures for youth training scheme refer to those leaving their scheme in the relevant year.
[3] This year is made up of two separate periods. April 1984 to July 1984 a survey of 10 per cent. of leavers in nine selected area offices and June 1984 to March 1985 a 15 per cent. national follow-up of youth training scheme leavers.

[4] 100 per cent. national follow-up of youth training scheme leavers.
[5] No separate analysis of part-time employment carried out.
[6] Although there was no separate question on part-time work, the answer was written by 1 per cent. leavers.
[7] A separate question on part-time work was introduced for the first time in this survey.

It is not possible further to analyse this data by the social class of the graduate's parents.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total spending by his Department on press and public relations in 1986-87; and what is the estimated expenditure for the current year.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Condoms

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that condoms sold in the United Kingdom must conform to the British Standards Institute and carry the BSI kite mark of quality testing and control.

Mr. Newton: There are no plans to control the sale of condoms, but we endorse the advice issued by the Family Planning Association that people should check that condoms conform to British Standard BS 3704. General guidance for the health service urges Health Authorities to purchase only products which conform to British Standard specifications.

Waiting Lists (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will specify the waiting list for the City, Highbury General and QMC hospitals, Nottingham, in each of the specialties for which figures are held centrally (a) in 1979 and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table. In 1979 only the first phase of the Queen's medical centre development was open. The second and larger phase was not completed until 1985. This development affected the local pattern of waiting lists. Waiting lists for the Nottingham district health authority as a whole were 8,327 at 31 December 1979 and 7,122 at 31 December 1986. In 1979 73,992 cases were treated in the district, compared to 98,352 in 1986.

Nurses

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many nurses have left the profession in the past 12 months;

(2) how many nursing posts are vacant in the United Kingdom; and how many of those are in London.

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the shortage of nurses in London.

Sir Barney Hayhoe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to improve the recruitment, retention and motivation of nursing and other staffs in the hospital services in London.

Mr. Newton: Information about nursing and midwifery staff vacancies and the number of nurses and midwives who left the profession are not collected centrally.

The NHS Management Board has commended to health authorities a number of measures to improve the recruitment and retention of nursing staff. The board is currently considering what further action may be required at national or local level in the light of the latest information about the recruitment and retention situation in London. Although the available information relates mainly to nursing, the relevance of any proposed action to other staff groups is also being considered.

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many British nurses are to work in the United States of America as a result of the recent nursing jobs fair.

Mr. Newton: Not enough to make an assessment.

Single Mothers (Benefit)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of single mothers on benefit now and in 1979; and if the number can be given accurately as to whether the mother is aged between 16 and 17, 17 and 18, 18 and 19, 19 and 20, 20 and 21, 21 and 25, 25 and 30, and 30 and by the number of children for whom each mother is responsible.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in exactly the form requested but the following details may be helpful:

Table 32.30 and 32.40 of the "Social Security Statistics 1986" give some information about the numbers of children in one parent families where the female is head of household and the age ranges of heads of families.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he expects a screening centre will be established in the Mid Staffordshire health authority following the recommendations of the working group chaired by Professor Sir Patrick Forrest;

(2) when he expects a screening centre will be established in the South East Staffordshire health authority following the recommendations of the working group chaired by Professor Sir Patrick Forrest.

Mr. Anthony Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects a screening centre will be established in Kidderminster following the recommendations of the working group chaired by Professor Sir Patrick Forrest.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs). For information about plans for further centres in the regions and more details about the first centres, including catchment areas, I suggest my hon. Friends consult the regional health authorities concerned.

NHS (Consultants)

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the number of whole-time and the number of part-time consultants in each surgical specialty in each hospital in England and Wales.

Mr. Newton: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. The table sets out available data in respect of employing authorities in England. The information about Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales.

[2] Including maximum part-time.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department last invited proposals from National Health Service managers on the provision of new consultant posts; what arrangements exist for the funding of consultant posts, including the initial funding of new posts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Under normal circumstances, funding for consultant posts is a matter for regional and special health authorities to determine, within their overall budget and as an integral part of service development. In addition to this, the Department has recently invited bids from health authorities for additional consultant posts in general medicine, general surgery and traumatic and orthopaedic surgery, under the pump-priming scheme set out in last year's consultative document "Hospital Medical Staffing: Achieving a Balance". This scheme is intended to boost normal consultant expansion, both on service and career grounds, by providing an additional 100 posts over the two years 1987-88 to 1988-89. The first 45 of these posts were announced on 20 July, when HAs were also asked to bid for the remaining 55, to be allocated in 1988-89.

The Department has set aside £8·6 million for this purpose. This additional funding will be provided centrally to each regional and special health authority and will be earmarked up to the end of 1990-91. After that time it will be built into each authority's baseline revenue allocations.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies have been made by his Department of the impact of new consultant posts on waiting lists for National Health Service treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No specific studies have been made. However several of the projects funded from the £25 million waiting list fund in 1987-88 involve the appointment (or earlier appointment) of consultants. Such projects will certainly result in more waiting list cases being treated but since these posts could also, in time, attract additional referrals from general practitioners the overall impact on waiting lists is more difficult to predict. There could, however, be a reduction in waiting times. The projects will be closely monitored.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department has invited proposals from National Health Service managers on the provision of new consultant posts in connection with waiting lists for treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: A number of the projects proposed by regions and supported from the waiting list fund have involved the appointment or earlier appointment of consultants (some on a temporary basis) in areas with problem waiting lists. An additional 100 consultant posts are also to be established as a result of the consultative document "Hospital Medical Staffing: Achieving a Balance", in general medicine, general surgery, and trauma and orthopaedic surgery. These appointments should have a further impact on waiting lists. The allocation to regions of the first 45 posts, announced on 20 July, took account of current staffing levels in those specialties, to ensure that they were allocated where most needed on service as well as career grounds.

Benefits

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will state the total number of people, including children, who are dependent on supplementary benefit for each of the years 1979 and 1987; and what is the projected number for 1990;

(2) if he will state the total number of supplementary benefit recipients for each of the years 1979 and 1987; and what is the projected number for 1990.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

	Number of supplementary benefit claimants (thousands)	Number dependent on supplementary benefit (thousands)
November 1979[1]	2,855	4,370
February 1987[1]	5,008	8,350
1989/90[2]	5,075	n/a

[1]The November 1979 figure is derived from the Annual Statistical Enquiry. The February 1987 figure is derived from the Quarterly Statistical Enquiry. The two figures are therefore not strictly comparable.
[2]Supplementary benefit will be replaced by income support in April 1988. The figure quoted is from the public expenditure White Paper, and is the projected average number of income support claimants in the financial year 1989/90. The estimate is based on the assumption that there will be no change from the number of people who would have been receiving supplementary benefit if it were not being replaced by income support.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the total number of supplementary benefit recipients, including dependents, as defined for community charge purposes.

Mr. Scott: No such figures are available at present. The estimated increases in housing benefit caseload, as a result of the community charge replacing domestic rates, shown in Annex J of the Green Paper, Paying for Local Government (Cmnd. 9714) include those currently receiving supplementary benefit.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the total number of supplementary benefit recipients and the total cost for each year since 1979 to the latest date available.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

Supplementary benefit claimants and cost

Date	Number (thousands)[1]	Financial year	£ million[2]
November 1979	2,855	1979-80	2,436
December 1980	3,118	1980-81	3,172
December 1981	3,723	1981-82	4,840
December 1982	4,267	1982-83	6,261
December 1983	4,349	1983-84	[3]5,592
December 1984	4,609	1984-85	6,472
February 1986	4,938	1985-86	7,512
February 1987	5,008	1986-87	8,022

[1] The figures for 1979 to 1986 are derived from the Annual Statistical Enquiry. The figure for 1987 is derived from the Quarterly Statistical Enquiry. The 1987 figures are therefore not strictly comparable with those for the earlier years.

[2] The expenditure figures are drawn from the public expenditure White Papers.

[3] The reduction is due to the introduction of Housing Benefit.

Mortality and Morbidity

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action is being taken by his Department in response to the increased rate of (a) mortality and (b) morbidity in winter periods compared with summer periods amongst (i) late neonatal babies, (ii) post-neonatal babies and (iii) pensioners.

Mrs. Currie: The underlying reasons for seasonal differences are very complex. We are concerned to reduce health problems encountered by vulnerable groups during the winter and policy is kept under active review. Among the steps already taken are the following.

The Government already provide considerable help with fuel costs to the least well off through the supplementary benefit scale rates and heating additions. We have extended automatic payments in heating additions to householders aged 65 or over and to those with young children.

The exceptionally cold weather scheme gives additional help to vulnerable groups. This year help has been given to twice as many people as in the previous scheme.

The Health Education Authority, which is funded by Government, gives further advice in its publication—The Pregnancy Book—on the care of babies in cold weather. It has also published a booklet jointly with Age Concern—Warmth in Winter—on how to cut the cost of keeping warm.

Cancer

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many persons were known to be suffering from cancer and cancer-related diseases in the Kettering district health authority area in each year since 1982;

(2) how many persons died of cancer and cancer-related diseases in the Kettering district health authority area in each year since 1982.

Mrs. Currie: Statistics from the registration of newly diagnosed cases of cancer are the nearest available data on the number of people suffering from cancer, and the latest available figures are shown in the table for usual residents of Kettering District Health Authority. The table also shows the number of deaths registered with underlying cause as cancer.

Number of registrations of newly diagnosed cases of cancer 1982, 1983 and number of deaths with underlying cause as malignant neoplasm (cancer)[1] 1982-1986 persons, all ages[2], to usual residents of Kettering District Health Authority

Homoeopathy

Mr. McAllion asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the review of homoeopathic medicines, scheduled for 1990, will take full account of the unsuitability of clinical trials as the paramount indicators of safety and efficacy to homoeopathic and herbal medicines.

Mrs. Currie: Formal clinical trials for herbal medicines are required only when claims are made for the treatment of serious diseases. This policy was published in a Medicines Act Information letter of November 1985. The relevant advice of the Medicines Commission and of the Committee on Review of Medicines is given in their 1985 annual reports, copies of which are in the Library. Of the two, only herbal medicines are subject to the European Community requirement of review by 1990.

Laundry Services (NHS)

Mr. Allen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress of privatising laundry services in the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: Health authorities in England have made good progress with competitive tendering for laundry services. As at 31 March 1987, 83 per cent. of these services had been put out to tender. Total annual savings generated by contracts awarded at that date are estimated at £7·2 million—£5·6 million from 101 tenders secured by in-house organisations and £1·6 million from 23 contracts won by private contractors.

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of abortions carried out in the United Kingdom in each year since 1967 (a) in the first 12 weeks of pregnancy and (b) in each week from the 12th to 28th week.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numbers of non-National Health Service abortions performed under agency arrangements on National Health Service patients resident in each regional health authority and in each district health authority in England and Wales in 1986 and the estimated numbers of women aged 15 to 44 years resident in each regional health authority and district health authority in England and Wales in mid 1986.

Mr. Newton: The information is given in the table.

Number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 in non-NHS premises to NHS patients under agency arrangements by Regional Health Authority (RHA) and District Health Authority (DHA) of usual residence, and estimated resident population of women aged 15-44 years

NHS Treatment (Cost-effectiveness)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research is being undertaken by or on behalf of his Department into the cost-effectiveness of different types of treatment in the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: The main Government-funded body for carrying out research on the effectiveness of different medical treatments is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science.

A principal purpose of the Department's own research programmes is to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the National Health Service. Many of the studies detailed in the latest edition of the Department's Handbook of Research and Development include a cost-effectiveness element. A copy is in the Library.

Perioperative Death and Complication Rates

Mr. Devlin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the different levels of perioperative death and complication rates between the regional health authorities.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend the information he seeks. Information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Speech Therapists (Pay)

Mr. Devlin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of implementing the claim of speech therapists for pay parity with clinical psychologists; and if he will make a statement on his consideration of the claim.

Mr. Newton: It is not possible to make meaningful comparisons between the pay of speech therapists and clinical psychologists because of differences in entry requirements, training, grading, job content and conditions of service. Pay negotiation is a matter for the Whitley council. I understand that negotiations are in progress on the 1987 pay claim.

North Tees General Hospital

Mr. Devlin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current shortfall in funding at North Tees general hospital.

Mrs. Currie: The provision of services locally is a matter for individual health authorities. My hon. Friend may therefore wish to write to the chairman of North Tees health authority for further information.

Nurseries and Childminders Act 1948

Mrs. Fyfe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to update the Nurseries and Childminders Act 1948 as amended in 1968, to (a) tighten the definition of a fit person and (b) give the local authorities more control in the vetting procedures of registration.

Mrs. Currie: Proposals for rationalising and improving the law governing the regulation of day care services for pre-school age children in Great Britain are contained in the White Paper the Law on Child Care and Family Services published in January 1987. Legislation will be introduced as soon as the Parliamentary timetable allows.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for the proportion of applications for housing benefit for private rented accommodation who, as a result of the amount of benefit awarded to them (a) have been unable to take up such accommodation or (b) have been unable to remain in such accommodation.

Mr. Portillo: Local authorities have statutory responsibility for administering the housing benefit scheme and information is not collected centrally on decisions taken in respect of individual awards of housing benefit.

Disablement Services Authority

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress of the work of the Disablement Services Authority.

Mr. Scott: The Disablement Services Authority came into existence on 1 July 1987, and it held its first meeting on that day. The Chairman, Lord Holderness, has discussed with me his preliminary plans for the authority's work, and I have every confidence in them, and in the authority.

I intend to adopt arrangements for an annual review of the authority's work similar to those which apply to other health authorities.

NHS (Funding)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make it his policy to link funding of the National Health Service to the growth in national income; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will estimate the additional funding required to bring the funding of the National Health Service in line with national income predictions over the next two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to the proposal in the recent report by the Institute of Health Service Management/British Medical Association/Royal College of Nursing. We are studying the report's analysis and comments, taking account of the fact that the proper measure of the National Health Service is the record and growing amount of treatment and care it provides.

The additional cost of increasing present planned gross expenditure on the National Health Service (Great Britain) in line with forecast growth of 2·5 per cent. per annum in GDP would be:

	£ million
1988-89	1,032
1989-90	1,605

Rating Reform

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, when he plans to publish details of the proposed rebate system for community charge for those on low incomes.

Mr. Scott: Our aim is to issue draft regulations for consultation later this year.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Moore: A total of £19·460 million. There may be additional added expenditure on certain computer projects which are currently being reviewed.

Hospital Food

Mr. Hinchliffe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to amend national guidelines on hospital food to cover the usage of cook-chill catering methods; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 23 July.

Mr. Hinchliffe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will arrange for his Department's inspectorate to undertake an urgent inquiry into proposals by Wakefield District Health Authority to introduce a cook-chill system of catering into Wakefield hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: No. The Yorkshire regional health authority has set up an expert committee which is looking at the implementation in the Region of cook-chill, which can offer a safe and cost-effective way of providing patients with good quality food.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of National Health Service patient meals produced by cook-chill and their proportion of the total; and what was the equivalent figure for each of the years since 1982, by National Health Service region.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this local information is not collected centrally.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the amount of money paid out in the last financial year by way of severe weather payments, the number of claims successfully made, the number of claims refused and the equivalent figures for the previous year.

Mr. Scott: The information which is available is as follows:

1985-86
Total number of payments: 458,061
Total amount of benefit paid: £11,633,541
Notes:
(1) Payments made in this year were in respect of a prolonged period of exceptionally severe weather which lasted for most of February.
(2) Information on the number of claims refused is not available.

1986-87
Total number of £5 payments: 2,040,372
Total amount of benefit paid: £10,201,860
Notes:
(1) Payments were available in respect of 2 weeks of very cold weather in January. In some areas, payments were available for a third or fourth week.
(2) Precise information on the number of successful claims is not available, but it is estimated that the number of claimants receiving help was approximately 950,000.

Information on the number of claims refused in 1986-87 will be available shortly, and I will write to the hon. Member.

Hypothermia

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the figures showing the number of deaths in each of the constituent parts of the United Kingdom which occurred last winter and which had hypothermia as a cause or contributory factor listed on the death certificate.

Mrs. Currie: The provisional numbers of deaths registered in the constituent parts of the United Kingdom with any mention of hypothermia on the death certificate, irrespective of whether it was or was not the underlying cause of death, during the period 1 October 1986 to 31 March 1987 are shown in the table.

Number of deaths registered with any mention of hypothermia 1 October 1986—31 March 1987, persons, all ages England and Wales, Scotland, Northern Ireland—Provisional

NHS (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent exchanges have taken place between his Department and National Health Service managers on initiatives to reduce waiting lists for National Health Service treatment; what further decisions will be announced before the autumn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The current initiative to make significant improvements in waiting times for hospital treatment is a high priority for Ministers, the National Health Service Management Board and for managers and clinicians in the health service. It features regularly on the agendas of meetings between the Department and health services managers, to make sure that improvements are made this year and that efforts and resources are targetted most effectively for next year. This will be the aim of any further decisions to be announced.

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on current initiatives to reduce the waiting lists for joint replacements.

Mr. Newton: The projects supported from the £25 million waiting list fund in 1987-88 include at least 5,000 extra hip replacements. In 1985 37,650 such operations were carried out in England, an increase of 34 per cent., compared with 1979. The aim is to achieve a total of 48,000 operations per year by 1990, that is 1,500 operations per million population per year.

Waiting List Fund

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a list showing the nature, location and value of expenditure authorised for 1987-88 and 1988-89 from the waiting list fund announced in November 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Full details of more than 350 schemes planned by Regional Health Authorities for the improvement of waiting lists and times in their districts supported from the waiting list fund of £25 million for 1987-88 were placed in the Library on 23 March 1987. Since then there have been only minor alterations to some of the projects to take account of changing circumstances. No expenditure has yet been authorised from the £25 million fund for 1988-89.

Telephone Exchange for the Deaf

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the future of the telephone exchange for the deaf.

Mr. Scott: We have received representations from the Royal National Institute for the Deaf and from five hon. and right hon. Members.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department will provide the resources to guarantee the future of the Royal National Institute for the Deaf's telephone exchange for the deaf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider revenue funding for the telephone exchange for the deaf run by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf.

Mr. Scott: The Manpower Services Commission is at present providing staffing assistance for the exchange through the community programme, and equipment has been provided by British Telecom. We are considering representations from the Royal National Institute for the Deaf about the long-term future of the project.

Pensioners

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people of pensionable age there are at present in Leeds, West; what proportion of the population of Leeds, West they represent; and what were the corresponding figures for 1957, 1967 and 1977.

Mrs. Currie: The available information on the number of persons of pensionable age (males aged 65 and over and females aged 60 and over) for parliamentary constituencies comes from the 1971 and 1981 Censuses of Population.

The information for Leeds, West is as follows:—

	Persons of pensionable age Number (thousands)	Per cent. of total population
1971 (1974 boundary)[1]	14·0	16·0
1981 (1974 boundary)[2]	13·7	17·7
1981 (1983 boundary)[2]	16·5	18·9

[1] Population present in Leeds West on Census night.
[2] Population usually resident in Leeds West.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many single parent families live on or below supplementary benefit level in Leeds, West; and what proportion of single parent families in Leeds, West this represents;

(2) how many people of pensionable age in Leeds, West are on or below supplementary benefit level; and what proportion of people of pensionable age they represent.

Mr. Scott: I regret that statistically reliable figures cannot be provided in the manner requested.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a breakdown of current times from the lodging of an appeal against refusal of supplementary benefit single payment to the appeal being heard by the Social Security Tribunal for the different tribunal locations in England and Wales.

Mr. Portillo: National administrative statistics of social security appeals are not disaggregated for localities smaller than a social security region.

In the quarter ending 31 December 1986 (the latest period for which statistics are available) the average number of weeks from lodgement of a single payment appeal to hearing was as follows:—

Social Security Region	Number of Weeks
Northern Eastern	11·5
London North	14·1
London South	18·8
Wales and South Western	11·7
Midlands	12·5
North Western	11·4
Great Britain	12·4

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total expenditure on supplementary benefit for each year since 1979.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows:

Supplementary benefit expenditure, Great Britain

£ million

Year	Cash Expenditure
1979-80	2·436
1980-81	3·172
1981-82	4·840
1982-83	6·261
1983-84	[1]5·592
1984-85	6·472
1985-86	7·512
[2]1986-87	8·022

[1] The fall between 1982-83 and 1983-84 reflects the introduction of housing benefit; in 1982-83 and earlier years the housing requirements of supplementary benefit recipients living in local authority housing or in privately rented accommodation were met by supplementary benefit. From November 1982 some, and from April 1983 all, such people had those requirements met by housing benefit.
[2] Estimated outturn; final figures are not yet available.

Mr. Bowis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the reasons for the pocket money differential in supplementary benefit payments to long-term patients in mental hospitals and to boarders in residential care accommodation of £7·90 and £11·50 per week, respectively; and if he will explain how these figures are calculated.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: The pocket money allowance for people in hospital is currently £7·90 and this represents 20 per cent. of the basic retirement pension. The personal expenses allowance for people in residential care and nursing homes is £9·25. For people in ordinary board and lodging and hostels, there are two rates of personal expenses; the short term rate of £10·00 and the long term rate of £11·15.

The personal expenses rate for people in residential care and nursing homes was introduced in 1985 and it was pitched roughly midway between the hospital pocket money allowance (and the personal expenses allowance for people in local authority residential accommodation which is at the same rate) and the personal expenses allowance for ordinary board and lodging. This reflects the fact that people in residential care and nursing homes tend to have fewer incidental expenses than people in ordinary board and lodging but more than people in hospital.

Milk

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will take steps to develop an education programme promoting the consumption of whole milk, with particular reference to infants and children up to the age of five years of age; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the role of milk and dairy products in achieving a healthy and balanced diet;

(3) what assessment his Department makes, and what expert advice he receives from outside his Department, concerning the nutriousness and palatibility of milk and dairy products and as to their role within a healthy and varied diet.

Mrs. Currie: We look to the Chief Medical Officer's Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA) for advice about food and health. Earlier this year the COMA panel on child nutrition published advice to health professionals recommending the use of whole cows' milk for children under five. We also plan to produce a health education booklet of guidance to health professionals based upon the forthcoming COMA report, "Present-Day Practice in Infant Feeding". In general we consider milk and dairy products a valuable part of the diet of infants and children under five years of age and as contributing to a balanced diet for adults.

Allowances

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Wales are currently receiving invalid care allowance and attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: At 31 March 1986, the latest date for which information is available, attendance allowance was in payment to some 44,000 people in Wales. I regret that information is not available for invalid care allowance.

Residential Homes

Mrs. Mahon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total cost to his Department of payments to residents to enable them to stay in private residential homes.

Mr. Portillo: Provisional estimates show that in February 1986 the total annual cost of supplementary benefit payments to people in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes was £459 million. It is not possible to separate out amounts paid to people in private homes alone.

Mrs. Mahon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the private residential homes that have been opened since 1979 in Halifax; and if he will break down the list to indicate the purpose and the number of beds.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information is not available centrally in the form requested. Details held on residential homes relate to the numbers of homes, places and residents, by client group, within each local authority social services area. In 1979 there were eight private homes for the elderly, with a total 100 places, in the Calderdale district. In 1986 the number of such homes had increased to 22 and the number of places to 306. There are no private homes in Calderdale for client groups other than the elderly. The "Directory of Private Hospitals and Health Services" includes a list of registered homes in Calderdale and elsewhere. A copy of the latest edition, published in november 1986, is in the Library.

Invalidity Payments

Mr. Blunkett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of cases where applications relating to invalidity payments for married women have been outstanding (a) for more than 12 months, (b) for more than six months, (c) for more than three months and (d) in total.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the requested information is not available, but at 17 July some 120,000 invalid care allowance claims had been received from married women of which about 31,500 were awaiting decision. The average time taken to process an invalid care allowance claim is currently about 19·2 weeks.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that applicants for invalid care allowance are informed whether award of invalid care allowance will affect any other allowance of any kind for any member of the same family; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Information about the effect of invalid care allowance (ICA) on social security and related benefits which may be paid to claimants or members of their families is contained in leaflet NI 212 which incorporates the ICA claim form and is seen by all claimants. It would not be practicable to attempt an exhaustive account of any wider effect on domestic incomes of ICA payments.

Nye Bevan Lodge, Southwark

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what assurances or information were given which led to his Department's inspectorate excluding Nye Bevan lodge from its investigation into residential care in Southwark;

(2) what information he has about the inquiries conducted by Southwark council into Nye Bevan lodge in Southwark, referred to in his answer by the then Minister of State, the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten) on 17 June 1985, Official Report, column 56.

Mrs. Currie: At the time the SSI inspection was agreed in July 1985 the local authority had before it a report from the acting officer in charge at Nye Bevan lodge. In the light of this report the Social Services Committee decided to set up a formal management inquiry. It was in that knowledge that the decision was made to set up an investigation by the Department's inspectorate into the authority's other homes. The report of the inspectorate was presented to Southwark Social Services Committee on 6 January 1986.

Health Care, Tynedale

Mr. Amos asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will pay an official visit to the Tynedale area of Northumberland to discuss the implications for medical services in Tynedale and other general health care problems in the area of the proposal to transfer £250,000 from the Tynedale health unit to Ashington.

Mrs. Currie: We have no immediate plans to do so. The allocation of resources to district health authorities, in the light of available resources and competing local priorities, is the responsibility of the regional health authority. If my hon. Friend has any concerns about this particular development perhaps he would write to the chairman of Northern regional health authority.

Residential Care

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he hopes to receive the final report of the Wagner Committee on the role of residential care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Lady Wagner's working party on the role of residential care is expected to report early in 1988. Residential care is part of a range of community care services and the working party's report will be taken into account, along with advice from Sir Roy Griffiths following his overview of community care policy and the results of other studies, in developing our policies.

Disabled People

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he next expects to meet the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation and other appropriate voluntary organisations to ascertain the response of disabled persons to the non-implementation of a number of provisions in the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986;

(2) when he next expects to meet the organisation, MENCAP, to discuss the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986;

(3) when he next expects to meet the Spastics Society to discuss early implementation of the relevant sections of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 in respect of the right of disabled persons to appoint representatives;

(4) when he next expects to meet the organisation MIND to discuss implementation of the sections of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 relating to assessments of the needs of patients who are being discharged from long-stay psychiatric hospitals.

Mr. Scott: All the organisations to which the hon. Member specifically refers are members of the steering group of disability organisations set up to oversee implementation of the Act. As I indicated in my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 7 July at column 119, I shall be writing to the steering group shortly setting out a suggested framework for involving voluntary organisations where appropriate in future work on the implementation of the Act.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of disabled people who at present get high extra additions under supplementary benefit for clothing, laundry and domestic additions whilst awaiting attendance allowance and dietary additions; and what are the equivalent figures for 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Scott: The available information is contained in table 10.7 of the "Supplementary Benefits Statistics, Annual Enquiries", December 1984 and February 1986, copies of which are in the Library. There was no comparable enquiry in 1985.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects resources to become available to introduce the sections of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 which have not yet been implemented.

Mr. Scott: More work is needed on the costs of the various sections of the Act and decisions on the timing of implementation will then need to be taken in the light of competing priorities for public spending.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to introduce enabling orders so as to implement the sections of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, which relate to assessments of the needs of physically disabled and mentally handicapped school-leavers.

Mr. Scott: I am unable to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 30 June at column 75.

Hospitality

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been spent by his Department on official hospitality in each of the last two financial years.

Mr. Moore: Expenditure on the full range of official hospitality in each of the last two financial years was:

1985-86	79,500
1986-87	89,500

Hospitals (Bath)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what plans exist to close the geriatric ward at St. George's hospital, Semington; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he is satisfied that Bath district health authority have acted in accordance with the service circular in halting geriatric admissions to St. George's, Semington, and all admissions to Melksham hospital; and if he will make a statement;

(3) why admissions to Melksham hospital were stopped on 20 July; and what alternatives are available;

(4) what communication he has had from Bath district health authority and any interested parties concerning the future of the St. George's hospital, Semington and Melksham hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: On 29 June Bath district health authority issued a consultation document on a proposal to re-locate geriatric beds provided at St. George's hospital, Semington. The proposals include the development of a 14-bed geriatric unit at Melksham hospital and a consequential reduction at that hospital in the number of beds available for general practitioners from 38 to 28. The consultation period ends on 30 September.

I understand that the Health Authority has stopped admissions of all elderly patients to St. George's, and of patients to Melksham until the number of patients is reduced to the proposed new level of beds. We have received representations from my hon. Friend the Member for Westbury and from the local community health council expressing concern that action should be taken to implement the proposals before the DHA has considered the results of consultation.

If the community health council opposes the proposals and the regional health authority endorses them then the final decision will be referred to Ministers in the usual way.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the total numbers of beds in (a) psychiatric wards, (b) mental hospitals and (c) community care for the current year by National Health Service region; and what are the equivalent figures for each year since 1982.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the average daily number of available beds in National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units in England, by regional health authority, for the years 1982 to 1985. Figures for local authority care are not readily available; the only relevant information relates to places in residential homes for mental illness supported by local authorities in the above years and is published in "Homes and Hostels for the Mentally Ill and the Mentally Handicapped, at 31 March, England", copies of which are in the Library.

NHS (Ancillary Workers)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of National Health Service ancillary workers have an income below the Council of Europe poverty level.

Mr. Newton: No definition of a poverty level has been endorsed either by any member state of the Council of Europe or by its Governmental Committee on the European Social Charter.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what are the current rates of pay for ancillary workers in the National Health Service, and the equivalent for 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986;

(2) when he expects the new pay scales for National Health Service ancillary workers to be agreed.

Mr. Newton: The basic weekly rates of pay for adult staff from 1 October 1986 range from £77·13 to £93·57 for non-supervisors and £85·95 to £101·75 for supervisors. On this date the Ancillary Staffs Whitley Council introduced a revised payments and grading structure and rates for earlier years are therefore not directly comparable. However, the range for all adult ancillary staff for the previous years was as follows:

	Rates
1982-83	£62·83 to £83·55
1983-84	£65·84 to £89·06
1984-85	£68·98 to £92·20
1985-86	£72·53 to £95·75

An offer of improved basic rates of pay from 1 April 1987 was made by the Management Side of the Council on 16 July. The trade union side is to consult its members and a response is not expected before the end of August.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of ancillary workers in the National Health Service are in receipt of any form of state benefit.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Sickness Benefit

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of those who will have their sickness benefit reduced on reaching the official retirement age; what estimate he has made of the cost of maintaining that benefit at the same rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. However a one per cent. sample of the 180,000 people receiving sickness benefit as at 5 April 1986 contained 8 people over pensionable age. Of these, only persons who were entitled to less than 80 per cent. of the full retirement pension would lose benefit. Due to the small numbers in the sample any estimate of the total numbers and cost of maintaining benefit at the same rate for all such people would be unreliable.

Health Expenditure

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest estimates for gross expenditure on health for England and Wales for the years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Newton: Estimated gross expenditure on the National Health Service in England is as follows

	£ million
1987-88	17,184
1988-89	17,566
1989-90	18,332

Expenditure for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Galbraith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the National Health Service per capita expenditure net of charges retained by family practitioners for each region of England.

Mr. Newton: I will write to the hon. Member.

ASH (Grant)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what grant is currently paid by his Department to Action on Smoking and Health in the current year; what grant will be paid in the succeeding year; and when he last had a meeting with the organisation's officers.

Mrs. Currie: The full amount that ASH will receive this year has still to be decided; it has so far received £88,500. The level of grant in aid for 1988-89 has yet to be discussed. Officials last met officers of ASH formally on 7 May. I am hoping to visit the organisation's headquarters shortly.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to transfer the funding of Action on Smoking and Health from public to private sources.

Mrs. Currie: None. However last year ASH received £36,000 from membership subscriptions and sales of literature, and estimates for 1987-88 from this source are in excess of that amount. They work closely with industry as the recent publication "Smoking Policies at Work" demonstrates.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to appoint a fund-raiser to the Health Education Authority.

Mrs. Currie: No. The authority is a special health authority and is part of the National Health Service.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the current budget of the Health Education Authority is devoted to campaigns against smoking tobacco.

Mrs. Currie: Approximately 10 per cent. is allocated directly to health education about smoking; additional amounts are devoted to campaigns like "Look After Your Heart" which include messages to the public about the health risks of smoking cigarettes.

National Health Service (Voluntary Assistance)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of assistance given to the National Health Service by voluntary organisations.

Mrs. Currie: I am happy to pay tribute to the important contribution which voluntary organisations and individual volunteers make to the National Health Service. Voluntary organisations complement the work of the National Health Service, for example in providing services which help to make a patient's stay in hospital more pleasant and in raising extra funds for amenities and equipment. Voluntary organisations can also provide a useful channel for consumer input to the development of statutory services, while they increase the direct involvement of individual volunteers which strengthens the National Health Service's links with local communities. There are a growing number of voluntary and self help groups supporting patients with particular ailments, many of which receive grant aid both from DHSS and local health authorities.

We have good reason to be grateful to voluntary organisations and to those who work in them.

Midwives and Health Visitors (Yorkshire)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many midwives and health visitors are employed by each of the health authorities in the Yorkshire regional health authority.

Mrs. Currie: The figures are shown in the table:

Midwives

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the trend in the number of student midwives;

(2) how many qualified midwives no longer practise midwifery.

Mr. Newton: In recent years there has been a decline in the numbers entering midwifery training in England and information supplied by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting shows that during the year ended March 1987 the number of entrants decreased by 6·8 per cent. to 2,759 compared with 2,960 in the previous 12 months. There has, however, been an encouraging improvement in the proportion passing their examinations from about 78 per cent. in the year ended

March 1986 to 95 per cent. in the year ended March 1987. Also information supplied by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting shows that the number of newly qualified midwives registered in England continues to increase and in the year ended March 1987 3,820 registered — an increase of 47 per cent. over the previous 12 months. The work load has also changed over recent years and the average number of births per midwife in England in 1985 (the latest date for which such information is available) was 34·1 compared to 37·5 in 1981.

AIDS

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on co-operation with other nations on research for treatment of AIDS.

Mr. Newton: In February 1987 my right hon. Friend, the then Secretary of State for Social Services, announced that the Government were granting to the Medical Research Council £14½ million over three years for a directed programme of research for the development of a vaccine for prevention and drugs for the treatment of AIDS. Following this the council is developing a programme of research to study the treatment of AIDS and HIV infection. The council has also established a therapeutic trials committee.

The council and the DHSS maintain close contact with European research through the EC medical and health research programme which includes research on AIDS, and with the World Health Organisation which is co-ordinating world-wide action on AIDS.

Research on antiviral treatment for AIDS and other Medical Research Council therapeutic investigations are to be co-ordinated with those undertaken in other countries.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he proposes to launch a further phase of the AIDS publicity campaign.

Mr. Newton: We will be launching a new phase of the campaign to warn of the dangers of transmitting AIDS through injecting drug use in early September. This will run in parallel with the next stage of the Government's drug prevention campaign.

Claimants (Appeals)

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be able to make a statement on the outcome of the discussions between his Department and interested groups about arrangements to help claimants with their appeals against local office decisions on social security claims.

Mr. Portillo: It is desirable that appellants to social security Tribunals should be provided with a list of local agencies who may be willing to represent them at the appeal. Local Office Managers will investigate in their areas whether a voluntary organisation is willing and able to compile such a list, which can then be issued by the DHSS local office. Where such arrangements cannot be made, local office managers will be asked to compile and issue the list.

Disablement Services Authority

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will announce the remaining member of the Disablement Services Authority.

Mr. Scott: I previously announced on 29 June 1987 at column 19 the appointment of seven further members of the Disablement Services Authority. I am delighted now to announce the appointment of Mr. Lewis Carter-Jones as a member of the Authority. I am sure that Mr. Carter-Jones, with his considerable experience of the problems associated with physical disability and his commitment to disabled people generally, will make a significant and worthwhile contribution to the authority.

Dental Manpower

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received the Report of the departmental review group on dental manpower; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Health Ministers have agreed the main recommendations of the Department's review group on dental manpower and copies of the report have today been deposited in the Library.

The review group has concluded that to meet expected demand for treatment the estimated number of dentists should be increased from the present figure of around 24,700 to 30,700 by 2025; a 25 per cent. increase in the estimated number of dentists over the period.

The group believes that it is essential to avoid an over-supply over the next 30 years. If dentists are trained at the present rate, there would be 1,700 more dentists than needed by the year 2015.

The review group has recommended that in order to achieve the desirable level of supply of dentists it will be necessary to reduce intake to United Kingdom dental schools by 10 per cent. from 1988, but the precise implications for individual dental schools are a matter for the University Grants Committee in conjunction with the Department of Education and Science and other interested parties.

The University Grants Committee has been conducting its own review of dental school provision concurrently with the review group and has been made aware of its findings.

Teaching Hospitals (Health Authorities)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will be appointing new chairmen and members of the special health authorities for London postgraduate teaching hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The term of office of about half the chairmen and members of the special health authorities for London postgraduate teaching hospitals expires on 31 March 1988. We are likely to require a number of new nominations and any right hon. or hon. Member wishing to recommend anyone for appointment to these authorities should write to me by 30 September 1987. Reappointments and changes will be announced in due course.

Heating Allowance

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the value in real terms of the supplementary pension rates, including the lower rate of heating addition, for a single or married pensioner after the April 1987 uprating, compared with their value after the 1977 uprating; and what is the difference between the percentage of average earnings at the time represented by the 1977 and 1987 rates.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 7 July 1987, c. 121-22]: I regret that the figure of 147·7 in the last line of the final column of the first table (the value of the lower rate heating addition at April 1987 where the November 1977 rate = 100) is incorrect. The correct value is 119·6.

Hospitals (Manchester)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will visit south Manchester to discuss with the district health authority and representatives of hospital staffs there the impending cuts in expenditure of £5·9 million in the period up to 31 March 1989.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 20 July 1987, c. 70]: I regret that my earlier reply contained an error. The figure quoted for real terms growth in revenue expenditure in South Manchester health authority between 1982-83 and 1985-86 should read 1·6 per cent. For this year the district's initial cash allocation is £88·5 million.

Psittacosis

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the incidence of psittacosis in Cambridgeshire in comparison with the rest of Britain; if he will approve at the earliest opportunity the order of the South Cambridgeshire district council making psittacosis a notifiable disease under section 16 of the Public Health (Control of Disease) Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 22 July 1987]: We do not collect comprehensive statistics about the incidence of this disease which would allow this comparison to be made. I understand that laboratory reports sent to the communicable disease surveillance centre in recent years were as follows:

	Number
1984	410
1985	322
1986	[1]329

[1] Provisional.

My officials are in touch with South and East Cambridgeshire district councils which are I understand concerned about local incidence. A decision about the approval of an order to make this disease notifiable in their areas will be taken as soon as possible.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for the years 1985 and 1986 the estimated percentages of women delivering in (a) England and (b) England and Wales (i) whose labours were induced, (ii) whose labours were of spontaneous onset and (iii) who had elected caesarean sections.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 23 July 1987]: The available information is shown in the table. The change in the method of collection of national (England and Wales) hospital data between 1985 and 1987 means that there will be no English data analysed for 1986.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 23 July 1987]: The available information is shown in the table. The change in the method of collection of national (England and Wales) hospital data between 1985 and 1987 means that there will be no English data analysed for 1986.

ENVIRONMENT

Defective Housing

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what, in each of the years since the Housing Defects Act has been in force, has been the allocation of cash to each local authority for specified system-built homes, by name for (a) repurchase and (b) repair; whether he will estimate how much of the money allocated has been spent in each year; and what have been the national allocations under the Act each year.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government do not allocate cash for specific purposes like this. It is for local authorities to decide how to use the resources they have available to meet their expenditure needs, including their obligations under the Housing Defects Act.

Total expenditure by local authorities on repurchase and repair grants in each year since the legislation came into force has been as follows:

£ million

	Repurchase	Repair grants
1984-85	4	—
1985-86	60	3
1986-87[1]	62	8

[1] Provisional.

Individual authorities record their expenditure on these matters in their HIP 2 forms, copies of which are available in the Library.

Severn-Trent Water Authority

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the current members of the Severn-Trent water authority, giving their occupations and working backgrounds, their remuneration and an estimate of how many hours a year, by name, each spend on this activity.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall answer this question shortly.

Inner Cities

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes there have been in the Government's policies towards the inner cities since the general election.

Mr. Trippier: The Government's policies for the inner cities will give increased emphasis to encouraging enterprise and investment in those areas, to increasing employment opportunities and to improving the physical environment. Our legislative proposals on housing, on local government finance and for promoting competition will help to ensure enhanced quality, choice and accountability in housing and services for inner city residents.

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table listing the total amount of money received by inner-city partnership authorities from 1979 to date, through the inner city programme, by authority and in total; and if he will list the amounts in cash and real terms.

Mrs. Roe: The urban programme grant payments for the partnership authorities for the years 1978-79 to 1987-88 are shown in cash and real terms in the tables. The figures for 1986-87 are estimated outturn and those for 1987-88 are estimates.

The urban programme grant payments shown are, in general, less than the allocation for the authority for the year in question because:

(a) grant is paid at a rate of 75 per cent. on local authority expenditure;

(b) some grant claims are submitted after the relevant financial year; and

(c) many capital projects are financed through loans, and the grant payment in that case is towards loan charges over a maximum period of 40 years.

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report, the total amount of rate support grant paid to inner-city partnership authorities from 1979 to date, by authority and in total.

Mr. Trippier: The figures requested are provided in the table:

Notes:

(1) For 1979-80 and 1980-81, rate support grant comprised needs and resources elements and domestic rate relief grant, and was not paid on a basis comparable with later years.

(2) From 1981-82 onwards, rate support grant comprises block grant and domestic rate relief grant. In 1981-82 Metropolitan police and GLC entitlements were paid to the rating authorities in their areas. In 1982-83 only the Metropolitan police entitlement was paid in this way.

(3) The rate support grant figures for the years 1979-80 to 1982-83 are final entitlements. The domestic rate relief grant elements for 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 are also final entitlements; those for 1986-87 and 1987-88 are first estimates. The block grant elements for 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 are entitlements after holdback based upon provisional outturn; those for 1986-87 are entitlements based on revised budgets, and those for 1987-88 are entitlements based on budgets.

(4) All figures are in cash terms.

Housing Association Properties (Rents)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's estimate of the rent which would be required for a private house costing a housing association £50,000 with 30 per cent. subsidy.

Mr. Waldegrave: I will write to the hon. Member.

Local Authority Swimming Pools

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what statistical or other evidence the Government have as to the number of local authority swimming pools which have been (a) closed and (b) opened over the past 10 years.

Mr. Chope: In 1977 a total of 894 public indoor pools and 229 public outdoor pools were operating in England. The respective figures for 1984 are estimated to be 950 and 167. Comprehensive information for the period 1984 to 1987 is not yet available, but in 1984 43 new indoor pools were planned for construction by 1987. A number of poorer quality pools have been closed in recent years but the closure rate is now declining.

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many local authority swimming pools in England and Wales can be classified as free form leisure pools and as to how many local authority traditional pools now include leisure equipment.

Mr. Moynihan: It is estimated that there are 45 local authority free form leisure pools in England and Wales. Information on the number of local authority traditional pools containing leisure equipment is not available.

PSA (Occupancy Audit)

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received his officials' report on the occupancy audit of the Property Services Agency 's eastern region area office at Newmarket; if he will make known its conclusions to the House; if, before authorising action to be taken on these and other recommendations relating to the government offices in Newmarket and Cambridge, he will evaluate the benefits of transferring still more functions out of congested high price areas into more easily accessible and less expensive accommodation; and if he will make it his policy to release for the private development of houses, high-tech business premises and university research facilities all or most of the under-utilised land owns in the Eastern region.

Mr. Chope: Occupancy audits are independent checks on the efficient use of accommodation. The audit of PSA's eastern region area office, Newmarket, was carried out in April-May 1987. My officials' are considering its conclusions which relate only to internal office moves to improve space utilisation.

My ministerial colleagues and I will continue to look critically at the Government estate in the eastern region, as elsewhere, to ensure that Departments retain no more land than is necessary to carry out their functions.

Government Offices (Suffolk and Cambridgeshire)

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to help provide land for private housing and industrial development in the Suffolk and Cambridgeshire area by moving single storey Government offices out of prime city centre sites into less expensive and more efficient accommodation in smaller market towns.

Mr. Chope: The use of any such sites by Government Departments is reviewed regularly.

Rating Reform

Mr. Malcolm Bruce asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the estimated costs of (a) the collection of the uniform business rate and (b) the total rate reform proposals including community charge.

Mr. Howard: There is no reason to assume that the cost of collecting the uniform business rate will be different from the cost of collecting non-domestic rates at present. Our preliminary estimate is that the cost per person liable of collecting the community charge may be broadly similar to the cost per person liable of collecting domestic rates.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the estimated costs of collection for the community charge in terms of the cost per £ sterling of collection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Our preliminary estimate is that the cost per person liable of collecting the community charge may be broadly similar to the cost per person liable of collecting domestic rates. The cost to an individual local authority will largely depend on how far they are successful in reducing unit costs.

Sir Barney Hayhoe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish tables indicating the range of domestic rates for indicative bands of rateable values for each local authority together with the estimated amount of the comparable community charge.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed in the Library information on rate bills in each authority of properties with rateable values of the national average—£200—half the national average and double the national average.

The amount of the community charge payable by those living in houses of those descriptions will depend on the numbers of adults living there.

Sir Barney Hayhoe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make it his policy to exclude the use of electoral rolls as evidence for liability to pay community charge in the legislation proposals for the reform of local government finance which he will be bringing before the House.

Mr. Howard: The community charges register in each area will be maintained separately from the electoral roll and will not have the same coverage. The Government do not, however, propose to deny community charge registration officers access to the electoral roll, which is a public document.

Sir Barney Hayhoe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of those now estimated not to be paying domestic rates are estimated to be the spouses of, or cohabiting with, ratepayers.

Mr. Howard: Based on data contained in the family expenditure survey, I estimate there are about 9½ million households with two adults where a rate is presently paid in whole or in part.

Sir Barney Hayhoe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of those over 18 years of age, living in England and Wales, have been assumed not to pay the community charge in detailed comparison between domestic rates and community charge payments issued by the Government because (a) of exemption and (b) of failure to register.

Mr. Howard: The figures published on 29 June in column 44, are based on full estimates of adult population in each area. They do not take account of any exemptions from the personal community charge, nor of failure to pay. Nor, however, do they take account of income from the standard community charge on second homes and empty properties.

Sir Barney Hayhoe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assumptions have been made about revaluation of non-domestic rateable values in estimating the figures for the proposed unified business rate published by the Government; and what is the estimated differences of such revaluation compared with the existing position, by whatever geographical breakdown is available.

Mr. Howard: The exemplifications placed in the Library in response to a question from the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 29 June—column 44—made no assumptions about the effect of the non-domestic revaluation in 1990. In broad terms, I expect that revaluation will result in relative increases in rateable value for prime shops and reductions for factories, and in relative increases in the south of England and reductions in the north and midlands.

Sir Barney Hayhoe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes to the community charge proposal have been announced by the Government (a) following consultations and before the dissolution of the last Parliament and (b) since then.

Mr. Howard: Last December my right hon. Friend placed in the Library the document entitled "Paying for Local Government: The Community Charge", which set out the Government's detailed proposals for the new system in England and Wales. We subsequently made it clear—before the election—that there will be community charge rebates for those on low incomes, and that there will be community charge exemptions in England and Wales similar to those provided for in the Abolition of Domestic Rates, Etc. Scotland Act 1987.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate as to the number of people who will be taken to court per year due to non-payment of the proposed community charges.

Mr. Howard: The community charge will be paid by a much larger number of people than the number who pay domestic rates. However, we do not anticipate a proportionate increase in the number of court cases for non-payment. We have published proposals for greater use of reminders and for payment by instalments to become the norm. These will help to reduce the incidence of arrears.

Mr. Cyril Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government have made any estimates as to the proportion of single adults on unemployment benefit who will receive community charge rebates.

Mr. Howard: No such estimates have been made since the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" — Cmnd. 9714 — was published in January 1986. Eligibility for community charge rebates will depend on the details of the rebate scheme, the level of the community charge and the income of the unemployed person concerned. All these matters remain to be determined.

Mr. Cyril Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the up-to-date community charge register will be made available to the public in computer-readable form; and whether local authorities will be empowered to sell this to non-political commercial organisations.

Mr. Howard: The Government have proposed that each individual will have the right to see all the information held about him or her on the community charge register; and that the general public will have the right to inspect only that part of the register that consists of a list of addresses and the names of those registered there.

We are considering whether registration officers should be authorised to sell copies of the part of the register that is available for public inspection.

Mr. Cyril Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how long the Government estimate it will take, on average, for new non-householder residents to register with their local authority for community charge.

Mr. Howard: Registration for the community charge in England will begin several months before 1 April 1990. Thereafter, all those liable for the community charge will be under a duty to ensure that they are registered within one month of becoming liable.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the total community charge payable per resident in all boroughs and districts in England in 1987-88, assuming the full replacement of domestic rates by community charge, the implementation of the proposals in "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714), and the payment of full community charge liability by the following percentages of those eligible (a) 95 per cent., (b) 90 per cent., (c) 85 per cent. and (d) 81 per cent., both with and without a safety net.

Mr. Howard: The illustrative community charge figures published on 29 June in column 44 are based on full estimates of adult population in each area. A shortfall in the number of people paying the community charge in any area would produce a proportionate increase in the illustrative personal community charge for that area.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's estimate as to the percentage of those eligible for the community charge who would both appear on the community charge register and pay the charge.

Mr. Howard: The Government have made no such estimate. Local authorities will have every reason to ensure that those who are liable for the community charge are registered and pay.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, based on the exemplifications which he placed in the Library on 29 June, he will publish further exemplifications comparing for each local authority and class of authority in England, and for local authorities in England as a whole, the implied effects on local taxes of changes in local authority expenditure under the present system and under the proposed system of a community charge and a national non-domestic rate, set out as follows: (a) the implied change in domestic rates per household if the expenditure assumptions used in the previous exemplifications were 1 per cent. higher, (b) the implied change in community charge per household, on the same basis as above and (c) a comparison of the information under (a) and (b) above expressed in terms of absolute amounts and of percentages.

Mr. Ridley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Fearn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many central and local government staff he estimates will be needed to administer the proposals in "Paying for Local Government" for a community charge and a unified business rate; and how many people are now needed to administer domestic and non-domestic rates.

Mr. Howard: It is estimated from the CIPFA "Rate Collection Statistics 1985-86 Actuals" that there are around 8,000 full-time equivalent staff employed on rate collection in local authorities in England and Wales. The Inland Revenue valuation office employs around 4,000 full-time equivalent staff on domestic and non-domestic rating.

An estimate of the number of staff required to administer the community charge and the national non-domestic rate will be provided at the appropriate time. The eventual outcome will depend on the extent of the application of new technology and the savings which can be achieved in the valuation office when domestic rates are abolished.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if any studies have been carried out within his Department on likely registration rates or collection rates for the proposed poll tax; and if he will place any such studies in the Library.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 13 July, at column 387.

Ms. Quin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state, following his consultations with local authorities on the introduction of the poll tax, how many local authorities in England and Wales are in favour of the proposed poll tax; and if he will list those local authorities in favour.

Mr. Howard: Twenty-seven principal councils and 14 town and parish councils in England expressed support for the community charge. I do not have the permission of those who submitted comments to publish their views. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is responsible for the consultation arrangements in Wales.

Ms. Quin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to the answer of 13 July, Official Report, column 528, what studies the Government have undertaken, in addition to the analyses of the impact on house prices of the abolition of domestic rates, on the effect of house prices of the introduction of the proposed poll tax.

Mr. Howard: Annex E of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" — Cmnd. 9714 — addresses both issues. No further studies have been commissioned.

Ms. Quin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 16 July, Official Report, column 578, of the 454 local authorities and associated bodies in England and Wales which responded to the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government," how many were in favour of the poll tax proposed by the Government; and what proportion of the total number of local authorities in England and Wales the number in favour represents.

Mr. Howard: Twenty-seven principal councils in England, just over 6 per cent. of the total number, expressed support for the community charge, as did 14 town and parish councils and three local authority associated bodies in England. But overall, those who supported the abolition of domestic rates outnumbered those who supported their retention by 2 to 1.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is responsible for the consultation arrangements in Wales.

Local Government Elections (Statistics)

Sir Barney Hayhoe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish any statistical or survey evidence available to him on any correlation between the incidence of paying local taxes and voting at local elections in the United Kingdom or in any other country.

Mr. Howard: I am not aware of any research into this topic.

Rates (Non-payment)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has as to in how many cases an authority for deduction for earning has been issued in respect of non-payment of rates in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Howard: The option of an attachment of earnings order is not available to the courts in cases of unpaid rates. It is proposed to provide such a power in relation to the community charge.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has as to how many people are currently in prison due to non-payment of rates; and at what annual cost.

Mr. Howard: It is estimated that on 31 May 1987, 11 people—all males—were being held in prison for wilful refusal or culpable neglect to pay rates. Estimates of annual costs per inmate are not available for specific types of prisoner, but information on average weekly costs for establishments was published in the "Report on the Work of the Prison Department 1985/86", Cm 11, Appendix 3, tables E, F.

Charities (Rate Relief)

Mr. Cyril Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total annual value of rate relief accruing to registered charities in England.

Mr. Howard: The total value of mandatory rate relief accruing to registered charities in England in respect of both domestic and non-domestic properties is estimated to be £103 million in 1987-88. Information on discretionary rate relief accruing to them is not collected centrally.

London Docklands

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state his estimate of the cost of land acquisition for each of the sections of new road planned in the London docklands as tabulated in his written answer of 3 July, Official Report, column 191.

Mr. Trippier: The cost of land acquisition for these road improvements will depend upon the outcome of detailed negotiations with landowners and any necessary compulsory purchase procedures.

Firework Displays

Sir Barney Hayhoe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will arrange for inquiries to be made by his officials into the noise and nuisance caused by public firework displays at times other than at the traditional period around 5 November.

Mr. Moynihan: Noise nuisance from firework displays is essentially a local matter. Local authorities can make an order to prevent the occurrence or recurrence of noise amounting to a nuisance, and individuals bothered in their homes by noise can take action in the magistrates' court, under the provisions of the Control of Pollution Act 1974. I have no reason to believe these powers are inadequate in relation to noise from firework displays.

UK 2000

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the terms of reference of UK 2000; what tasks it is currently handling; and what is the precise role of Mr. Richard Branson.

Mr. Trippier: The objectives of UK 2000 are:

(a) to increase the quality and quantity of practical improvements to the urban and rural environment;

(b) to offer challenging and worthwhile work experience for community programme participants and volunteers;

(c) to establish new enterprises based on the natural or man-made environment.

Work is focused on specific themes. Currently these are:

greening the cities, by bringing neglected land into use as parks, walkways, wildlife reserves, or city farms; conserving and restoring industrial heritage, with work on canals, railways and mills;

tackling litter, especially on beaches and roadsides;

helping tourists by improving information and facilities;

making more of nature: improving lesser known and lesser cared for woodlands, ponds, paths and other habitats; recycling rubbish, to encourage the conservation of natural resources.

At present UK 2000 has 214 projects under way involving 3,900 Community Programme workers and 7,000 volunteers.

Mr. Richard Branson is the chairman of the board set up to direct UK 2000.

Rent Arrears (Leeds)

Mr. Battle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the tenants of Leeds city council are behind with their rent payments; and what proportion of the total number of tenants they represent.

Mr. Waldegrave: The available information is the number of housing tenants in arrears with payments for rent, rates and other charges and appears on page 10 of the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy's report "Arrears Statistics September 1986", a copy of which is in the Library.

Tenancies

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to allow existing lettings to be converted into tradeable fixed-term leases for a fixed term or for the life of the existing tenant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. I do not think such a proposal would be attractive to landlords, or useable by many tenants. We propose instead to tackle the very real problems of the private rented sector by deregulating new lettings.

Ministerial Cars (CS Gas)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any cars currently allocated for ministerial use carry supplies of CS gas.

Mr. Chope: No.

Nuclear Installations (Discharges)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to review the system for reporting unplanned discharges from nuclear installations, in the light of the agreement on that subject made by member states at the recent meeting of the Paris Commission for the prevention of marine pollution.

Mr. Moynihan: No. Members of the commission will be reviewing existing notification arrangements at the next meeting of the technical working group.

Birtenshaw Farm, Bolton

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received about the planning appeal decision at Birtenshaw farm, Bolton; how many supported the decision; and if he will list these representations by categories to include businesses, local residents and public authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: Representations about the appeal decision, or about the proposal to remove the covenant on the land, have been made by 333 local residents. They have also been made by the Birtenshaw Land Appeal Group, students at two local schools, the local Labour party and the local Civic Trust. None has been made by businesses or by public authorities, nor have any been made in support of the appeal decision.

Mersey Basin Programme

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money Her Majesty's Government expect Tameside metropolitan borough to receive from European funding for the Mersey basin programme over each year of the programme.

Mr. Trippier: The amount received by Tameside will depend on the value of eligible council projects for each year of the programme; the priority which it accords to those projects within its own capital investment programme; and the priorities of the Mersey basin campaign overall.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of money spent by Her Majesty's Government and by the European Community on the Mersey basin programme has been spent in the upper parts of the basin at Oldham, Tameside, Stockport and Manchester; and what amount in the lower part of the basin.

Mr. Trippier: Of the £65·6 million European regional development fund grants awarded under phase 1 of the Mersey basin programme, £4·1 million went to Oldham, £5·6 million to Tameside and £2·5 million to Manchester —18·6 per cent. in all. No grant went to Stockport, and the remaining £53·4 million went to the other parts of the programme area. Government expenditure in support of the Mersey basin campaign has been incurred under a wide range of powers and programmes but no record has been kept of its total extent.

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in view of the concern expressed by the textile districts of Greater Manchester over the implementation of phase 1 of the Mersey basin programme, he is satisfied that there has been adequate formal consultation with local authorities on the full programme of phase 2 prior to its submission to the European Economic Community.

Mr. Trippier: Yes — through the three formally-constituted local authority-led project groups of the Mersey basin campaign. The interests of the textile districts of Greater Manchester have been well catered for in the EC submission.

Local Government

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish, in relation to the exemplifications he placed in the Library on 29 June, the following assumptions for each local authority and class of local authority in England, and for local authorities in England as a whole: (a) the amount of "needs" grant, (b) the amount of "standard" grant, (c) the adult population, (d) the amount of non-domestic rateable value, (e) the amount received from the national non-domestic rate, (f) the amount of grant-related expenditure, (g) the amount of expenditure and (h) the amount of "minimum needs threshold" used to calculate the amount of "needs" grant.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed in the Library the figures for expenditure, grant-related expenditure, grant, non-domestic rate income, non-domestic ratea ble value and adult population which underlay the illustrative community charge figures placed in the Library on 29 June. The figure for grant has been calculated by deducting from the grant-related expenditure figure the sum of £178 per adult which represents the community charge required to finance spending at the GRE level. No separate calculations of needs and standard grant were made. Nor was there any need to estimate minimum needs thresholds.

Resource Recovery and Power Generation Plant (Liverpool)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the erection of a resource recovery and power generation plant at Stonebridge lane, Gillmoss in Liverpool; what discussions he has had with representatives of Liverpool city council about the matter; and if he will now reconsider his decision not to establish a full public inquiry.

Mr. Moynihan: Seventy-eight representations have been received about the proposed plant. Her Majesty's district inspector of pollution has discussed the general principles of the design with Liverpool city council, and further detailed examination and discussions will be necessary before he would be in a position to register the plant for air pollution control purposes. My right hon. Friend still sees no justification for holding a full public inquiry into these proposals.

Bradford Investments plc

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set up an inquiry into the operation of rental purchase schemes by Bradford Investments plc.

Mr. Waldegrave: I will write to the hon. Member.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent by the London Docklands Development Corporation on hospitality, public relations and personal expenses in the last financial year.

Mr. Trippier I will write to the hon. Member.

Whale and Turtle Products

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what whale or turtle products have been purchased by this Department in each of the last two years.

Mr. Chope: None.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those individuals and organisations who have taken up import permits for whale and turtle products in each of the past two years.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to ban imports of (a) whale products and (b) turtle products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Homelessness

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the London Tourist Board concerning the use of London hotels by homeless people.

Mr. Waldegrave: My officials have discussed this matter with representatives of the London Tourist Board and other Government Departments concerned. Our code of guidance on part III of the Housing Act 1985 discourages authorities from using hotels as interim accommodation for homeless households except as a last resort and suggests various preferable alternatives such as empty council dwellings awaiting repair or a short term lease of empty private sector property. Our recent initiatives through Estate Action and through the Housing Corporation's mixed-funding programme have given practical assistance. Tourism matters of course fall within the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of the Inner London education authority moving out of County hall and relocating in alternative premises.

Mr. Chope: The acquisition of alternative premises is a matter for ILEA. The Government are currently considering requests from ILEA for assistance.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. David Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what periodic review is made by the Government of the effectiveness of enterprise zones; what response the Government have made to recent business or academic studies of this subject; what effect enterprise zones have had on business in the periphery of the zones but outside their boundaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The progress of the enterprise zones experiment has been monitored since it began. In 1986, halfway through the 10-year period of designation of the earliest zones, we commissioned an evaluation study of the experiment and have recently received our consultants' report. We are considering future policy in the light of that report.

Funfairs

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to call in all planning applications for the permanent establishment of funfairs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. It is my right hon. Friend's policy to be very selective about calling in planning applications for his decision; applications will in general be called in only if planning issues of more than local importance are involved.

Mrs. R. Batts

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the reason for the delay in the purchase by Mrs. R. Batts of her council home at 26 Hilverson crescent, London SE 22; and when he expects Southwark council to complete the transaction.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that this case was delayed while Southwark council considered amendments to its standard form of lease to conform with the requirements of the Housing and Planning Act 1986. The lease has now been reprinted and Mrs. Batts should shortly receive the legal documentation from the council necessary to complete the purchase.

National Trust

Mr. Michael J. Martin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds he has made available to the National Trust for the upkeep of historical buildings during the years 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Moynihan: The National Trust has received grants from the Department—prior to 1 April 1984—from the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission and from the National Heritage Memorial Fund. The figures are summarised in the table below, which covers trust properties in England.

The major part of the NHMF payments relates to two major country houses — Calke Abbey, which the Government accepted in lieu of tax and allocated to the care of the trust, with endowment and repair funds channelled through the NHMF; and Belton House.

Some NHMF grants relate to gardens or land; a detailed breakdown is not possible in the time available.

£000s

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86
Department of the Environment Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission	682	999	798
National Heritage Memorial Fund:
Calke Abbey and Belton House	6,625	5,220	1,620
Other grants	2,100	470	1

Lead Pipes

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been spent by local authorities since 1979 on programmes of lead pipe removal.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held by the Department.

Water

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of all outstanding complaints against the United Kingdom Government by the Commission of the European Community under directions relating to the quality of drinking water and bathing water in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 20 July, in column 104, concerning bathing waters. We have received representations from the Commission concerning one aspect of drinking water in one supply area, and will be responding shortly.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the regional water authorities are conducting biological analysis or designated bathing beaches to detect the presence of human enteric viruses in line with the provisions of the European Community bathing water directive.

Mr. Moynihan: During 1986, the last year for which results are available, four water authorities measured enteroviruses in bathing waters.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes, in legislation for water privatisation, to ensure that the National Rivers Authority should have responsibility for the quality of public drinking water supplies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: No. It will be for the privatised water authorities, and the existing private sector statutory water companies, to maintain the quality of public water supplies in accordance with EC and other statutory requirements. It will remain the role of local authorities to ensure that water supplies are sufficient, and wholesome. The Secretary of State will continue to have responsibility for checking compliance with EC requirement.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the cost of household water metering throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: The Watts committee, which reported in August 1985 — Joint Study of Water Metering: Report of the Steering Group — concluded that the average annualised cost of metering per customer including meter provision, installation, and maintenance and additional meter reading and billing costs, would be of the order of £4·75 per year; that for the average consumer the economic benefits of 'traditional' metering would be of the same order of magnitude as the costs; and that recent developments, including electronic notebooks and doorstep billing, could remove some of the costs and problems of reading 'traditional' meters. They recommended controlled comprehensive experiments with domestic metering which, amongst other things, would test present cost assumptions.

The Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Bill contains provisions which would enable water undertakers to carry out metering trials, and proposals for a co-ordinated programme of trials are being formulated by the water industry.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the results of surveys of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons in public drinking water supplies in the 10 regional water authority areas; and if he will comment on the public health significance of those surveys.

Mr. Moynihan: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the current levels of bromate in public water supplies in each of the 10 regional water authority areas; and what is his estimate of the total quantity of organo-bromine biodes being biodegraded during sewage treatment to inorganic bromide, discharged to rivers, abstracted for drinking water and oxidised to bromate during disinfection at water treatment works.

Mr. Moynihan: I will write to the hon. Member.

Retail Developments

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those applications for out-of-town retail developments of (a) below 250,000 sq ft and (b) above 250,000 sq ft currently before his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is being prepared and I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he is considering issuing new guidelines to local authorities concerning large retail developments proposed in inner-city areas; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will set out his Department's guidelines concerning proposed retail developments which could affect the vitality and viability of town or city centres as a whole; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Policy on major retail development is set out in the circular issued jointly by my Department and the Welsh Office last December—DOE circular 21/86, Welsh Office 58/86. That circular includes the text of a statement made on 5 July 1985 by the then Secretary of State for the Environment about the possible impact of new retail developments on the vitality and viability of existing town centres.

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to undertake studies into the employment displacement effects caused by the development of large retail outlets in out-of-town areas.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department does not fund any such studies at present, but is aware of other research in progress on this subject—for example, the study funded by the Economic and Social Research Council into the impact of the Gateshead Metro centre on Tyneside.

Council House Sales

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the table giving information on sales of dwellings by each local authority in England referred to in the answer to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 15 May, Official Report, column 395.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today placed in the Library the latest version of table 2 giving information reported by each local authority in England on the progress on council house sales up to the end of March 1987.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Ridley: Provision in DOE(C) for management and computer consultancies during 1987-88 is £5·2 million, and for PSA £8·6 million.

Spectrum Arena

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the consultations between Warrington and Runcorn development corporation and Warrington borough council over the Spectrum arena will take place.

Mrs. Roe: The chairman of the corporation wrote to the leader of the council on 14 July 1987.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the date when previous discussions took place on the Spectrum arena between Warrington borough council and Warrington and Runcorn development corporation.

Mrs. Roe: On 29 April 1986.

Medieval Wall Paintings

Mr. Cormack asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will discuss the results of the survey of English medieval wall paintings, currently being carried out by the Courtauld Institute and the Royal Commission on Historic Monuments, with the chairman of the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission with a view to making special funds available for the conservation of these paintings.

Mr. Moynihan: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Assured Tenancies

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 7 July, Official Report, column 140, to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) if section 11 of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 applies to assured tenancies when the tenancy is renewed.

Mrs. Roe: No. But we propose to extend section 11 so as to apply to assured tenancies not only when first granted but also on renewal.

Canary Wharf

Ms. Gordon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total amount of public funds (a) committed and (b) spent to date on or in connection with the proposed Canary wharf development, broken down by category of expenditure.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his answer, 10 July, c. 296]: The information requested is as follows:

	(a) Committed on, or in connection with, the Canary wharf development	(b) Spent to 30 June 1987

Housing Statistics

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many of the houses designated as unfit in Wales, Scotland, England and each of English regions are lived in by pensioner households; and what proportion of those living in such housing pensioners represent;

(2) how many pensioners in Scotland, Wales, England and each of the English regions live in housing which has been designated as unfit; and in each case, what proportion of the total number of pensioners in each area that number represents.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 20 July 1987, c. 102]: The most recent source of information on the numbers of pensioners and pensioner households in unfit housing in England is the 1981 English house condition survey. Figures are available only for three broad regions. These are as follows:

	Northern, Yorkshire and Humberside and North-East	South-East including Greater London	East Midlands, West Midlands, East Anglia, South-West	England
Number of pensioner[1] households in unfit dwellings	131,000	110,000	132,000	373,000
Pensioner households in unfit dwellings as a percentage of all pensioner households	9	8	9	8

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the current members of the Severn-Trent water authority, giving their occupations and working backgrounds, their remuneration and an estimate of how many hours a year, by name, each spends on this activity.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987]: Information about current members and members' remuneration is to be found on pages 29 and 48 of the report and accounts of Severn-Trent water for 1986-87 which was presented to Parliament on 15 July 1987. PRIME MINISTER

Excise Duties

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government will agree to a substantial reduction in excise duties on alcoholic beverages and tobacco to enable all customs barriers on trade with the European Economic Community to be removed by 1992.

The Prime Minister: The Government have fundamental difficulties with the European Community Commission's proposals for the removal of fiscal barriers to trade in the Community—not least those relating to the rates of excise duty on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister why she agreed to the removal of all customs barriers on trade between the United Kingdom and the rest of the European Economic Community by 1992; and what steps will be taken to protect British manufacturers of alcoholic beverages and tobacco from imports bearing a lower rate of excise duty.

The Prime Minister: Further to the provisions of the original treaty of Rome to which the United Kingdom acceded in 1972, the Single European Act, which was before Parliament when it passed the European Communities (Amendment) Act (which received Royal Assent on 6 November 1986), sets the framework for completion of the single market, which it defines as "an area without internal frontiers,"
by 1992. The Government are committed to attainment of that goal. How this may be achieved is a matter for discussion within the Community and many member states, including the United Kingdom, can be expected to have strong views on the issue. United Kingdom interests have, however, been safeguarded both by the general declaration on articles 13 to 19 of the SEA allowing member states to maintain national measures for the control of immigration from third countries, as well as to combat drug smuggling, terrorism and crime; and by the requirement that fiscal legislation can only be adopted with the unanimous agreement of the member states.

The Commission's proposals are for harmonised rates of excise duty and would not allow alcoholic beverages and tobacco to be imported into the United Kingdom at rates of excise duty lower than those applied here.

Ministers (Private Office Staff)

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Prime Minister if she will list the number of staff in the private office of each Minister in Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally.

Space Programme

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her oral reply on 23 July, Official Report, column 482, what is now her estimate of the level of resources being made available from the private sector to the British national space centre and British space programme.

The Prime Minister: Following my remarks on 23 July, major aerospace companies agreed to continue work at company expense on certain key national space programmes until the European Space Agency ministerial council meeting in November. Information on the overall amount of funding being made available to these programmes by the private sector is not held by the Government.

World Decade for Cultural Development

Mr. Foulkes asked the Prime Minister what are Her Majesty's Government's plans for Britain's participation in the early years of the United Nations world decade for cultural development from 1988 to 1997.

The Prime Minister: We have no current plans to participate. Initial studies have been financed by UNESCO, of which the United Kingdom is not a member.

Windscale Fire 1957 (Papers)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Prime Minister if she will arrange for all papers concerning the 1957 Windscale fire to be made available under the 30-year rule.

The Prime Minister: The release of papers relating to the Windscale fire will be dealt with by the Departments concerned in the normal way. Release will be in accordance with the requirements of the Public Records Acts and will be as full as possible.

Intergovernmental Organisations

Mr Foulkes asked the Prime Minister if she will list all the intergovernmental organisations of which the United Kingdom is a member, giving for each one which Department has primary responsibility, which other Departments are involved, and in what ways and whether Her Majesty's Government have a permanent diplomatic mission at the relevant organisation's headquarters.

The Prime Minister: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman shortly.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Rooker asked the Prime Minister on how many occasions in 1987 members of her staff have been guests of British Nuclear Fuels plc; and if she will list them by title and date.

The Prime Minister: My chief press secretary took part in three BNF plc weekend information seminars in Cumbria in April, July and September, 1987 and in a dinner for the media in February. A member of the policy unit has visited a BNF plc plant and another attended a reception given by BNF plc in 1987.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Pensions

Mr. Butler asked the Lord Privy Seal when he expects the TSRB to produce its report on the retrospective revision of Members' pension provision.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on Friday 24 July 1987, at column 502.

Accommodation

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will list all the rooms in the Palace of Westminster and its outbuildings, their approximate size and the numbers of people who occupy each of them.

Mr. Wakeham: No, the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

If the hon. Gentleman has a particular point in mind and would like to write to me, I shall see what I can do.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Open University

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the present level of funding for the Open University.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement later in the year about the Open University's grants for 1988. In reaching his decision he will take into account the advice of the Open University visiting committee.

University Statistics

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many European Economic Community nationals are attending university in Britain; and how many British citizens are attending university in other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Jackson: There were 5,400 students from European Community countries attending universities in the United Kingdom in 1985-86, and 7,500 attending all higher education institutions in the United Kingdom. Available data for United Kingdom students studying in other European Economic Community countries cover all higher education, except for France and Netherlands, and are as follows:

United Nations International Literacy Year

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for United Kingdom participation in the United Nations International Literacy Year in 1990.

Mr. Dunn: The Government are taking vigorous steps to counter illiteracy in this country through improving standards in schools, through Manpower Services Commission programmes and through the efforts of the adult literacy and basic skills unit. How the proposed International Literacy Year should be marked in 1990 will be considered later in the light of the success of these efforts.

Education Reform

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the bodies representative of parents from whom he received representations prior to the publication of his recent consultative papers; and if he will place copies of such representations in the Library.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and his ministerial colleagues frequently meet parents and their representatives in the normal course of work. The reforms set out in our consultation documents take account of views expressed by parents and others over a number a years.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the formal responses he has received to his various consultative papers on educational change.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. It is for those originating responses to decide whether or not to make them publicly available. We are, however, arranging for copies of responses, other than those from individuals, to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the numbers produced of each of his duplicated consultative documents on educational reform, the numbers he distributed initially without request, and those subsequently distributed with or without charge, respectively.

Mrs. Rumbold: The numbers of documents produced, to date, are as follows:

	Total number produced	Number distributed initially	Number distributed subsequently
The National Curriculum 5-16	60,000	1,200	56,800
Charges for school activities	9,000	1,100	7,000

[1] Document issued 20 October 1987.

All these documents are available free of charge from the Department.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, as a contribution to the consultations he is holding concerning the opting out procedures for maintained schools, he will estimate, or initiate studies to establish, the value to schools in (a) ILEA and (b) other local education authorities, of the professional, administrative and other goods or services not currently covered by current capitation allowances.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. Current capitation allowances commonly account for only a small proportion of school budgets and there would be little point in collecting information in the form proposed. As from September 1987 local education authorities have to provide governing bodies with an annual statement of all expenditure incurred at their schools, and we propose to extend the requirement to include information about the cost of central educational services.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consultations he had with the bodies currently responsible for determining the syllabuses of the main school examinations, prior to deciding the terms of paragraph 33 of his consultative paper on the national curriculum proposing transfer of these responsibilities to himself.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's consultation document on the national curriculum proposes that approval of the syllabuses prepared by the school examination bodies, which is currently undertaken on a non-statutory basis by the Secondary Examinations Council, should be put onto a statutory footing. The examination bodies have been invited to respond to this proposal and we shall take their comments into account, along with others we have received.

Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list (a) the members of the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education, (b) the criteria for selection of members, (c) the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places and (e) how many Trades Union Congress-nominated places are taken up by women.

Mrs. Rumbold: The membership of the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education is as follows:

Professor Anthony Becher

Mr. Peter Ward

Mr. William Wright
Chief Education Officer, Wakefield

Appointments to the council are made by the Secretaries of State for Education and Science, and for Wales on a personal basis. The criteria for selection of members were set out in Department of Education and Science circular 3/84, Welsh Office circular 21/84:

"The membership of the Council will be drawn mainly from practising school teachers, teacher trainers and elected members of local education authorities, with the aim of giving the Secretaries of State the benefit of the advice of experienced professionals with a broad knowledge of the best practice in teacher education. It will also be desirable to facilitate links through the membership with the other main bodies concerned with the location, scale and quality of teacher education."

The council at present consists of five staff of teacher training institutions; four other higher education members; three teachers; six members or officers of local education authorities and three other members. One teacher member is also a councillor. Two LEA members and one teacher trainer member were originally appointed while serving teachers. There are no Trades Union Congress-nominated places on the council.

Lecturers

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on average pay levels of higher and further education lecturers, and higher education lecturers, respectively, in each or all of the following: (a) England and Wales, (b) Great Britain, (c) universities in the United Kingdom, (d) polytechnics in England and Wales and (e) all non-university higher education in Great Britain; and what equivalent information he has, converted to £ sterling, in relation to (i) France, (ii) Spain, (iii) Italy, (iv) West Germany and (v) the United States of America.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to her reply 24 July 1987, c. 496]: The available information is as follows:

Average pay levels £ at April 1987[1]	England and Wales	Great Britain	United Kingdom
Further and higher education lecturers	15,380	15,388	—
Maintained[2] sector further education lecturers	14,736	14,693	—
University Lecturers	17,611	17,644	17,658
Polytechnic lecturers	16,063	—	—

Notes

[1] The latest available data on actual average pay is 31 December 1984 for university lecturers and 31 March 1985 for maintained sector further and higher education lecturers. These figures have been increased by the pay settlements since these dates. This means that the maintained sector further education lecturers pay levels are as at 1 April 1986—no further settlement has been agreed since that date. The higher education lecturers pay levels are as at March 1987.

[2] This includes lecturers in both non-advanced and advanced further education. Separate data are not available.

At present the Department has no equivalent information on salary levels in other European countries, or in the USA, and is awaiting the results of a report which the EEC is funding at Leiden university in the Netherlands. The purpose of this study was to produce a comparative analysis of teachers' pay and conditions of service—at all levels, including higher education—in EEC member countries. I shall write to the hon. Member when the results of that study are available.

DEFENCE

Plutonium and Uranium

Mr. Morley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been undertaken in his Department concerning the peaceful uses to which plutonium and enriched unranium from nuclear warheads can be put in the event of successful multilateral nuclear disarmament negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No substantive studies have been undertaken. Current disarmament proposals do not involve United Kingdom-owned nuclear weapons.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated expenditure of his Department in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is estimated that the Ministry of Defence will spend approximately £15·2 million on management and computer consultancies during the current financial year.

AIDS

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces who have trained in East Africa have now contracted AIDS.

Mr. Freeman: It is not my Department's policy to disclose information on individual medical cases.

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in view of the serious risk of AIDS infection, he will reconsider the use of training facilities in East Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: AIDS is a worldwide problem. I see no need to reconsider the use of training facilities in East Africa, which are of great value. I am satisfied that the arrangements for briefing service units proceeding abroad, which cover AIDS as well as other health hazards, are adequate.

Master James Gibbs

Miss Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now in a position to make a further statement about the accident to Master James Gibbs on Okehampton range on 22 April.

Mr. Freeman: Following the Army's inquiry into the incident which occurred on Okehampton range on 22 April, I am now able to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 1 May, at columns 299-300.

James Gibbs was injured by an explosion when he and five other boys aged 18 or under, supervised by a local resident, were walking on the Okehampton ranges.

On the basis of statements received and the evidence examined by an explosive ordnance expert it seems most likely that a blind round (that is ammunition which failed to function correctly after ignition) detonated when James Gibbs struck it with another piece of metal. I regret that at some time an individual conducting a practice must have contravened the regulations which require all blinds to be recorded and destroyed. It cannot be established precisely how long ago the round which caused James Gibbs injuries was fired.

The Okehampton range byelaws prohibit the taking of any projectile or other metal found within the danger area. Prominent notices advise visitors not to touch any metal objects. James Gibbs and his party had to pass one of these notices to gain access to the range. It seems that the adult in charge of the party was aware that the children were collecting metal from the range but made no attempt to stop them. James Gibbs himself was aged nearly 13 at the time of the accident and although he could not be expected to identify objects on the range he should have exercised caution and understood the dangers of his actions. This unfortunate incident, therefore, serves to underline the importance of observing range byelaws, warning flags and notices which are intended for public protection.

In order to do all we can to prevent this from happening again, the range on which the accident occurred was temporarily closed and fully searched for blinds; it has now been reopened. In addition, warning notices on the perimeter of Dartmoor ranges will be reviewed to ensure that there are enough of them. The wording of all notices will be changed so that a more forceful message is conveyed.

Falklands Campaign

Sir Marcus Fox asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the Government intend to respond to the Defence Committee's fourth report from the last Session on implementing the lessons of the Falklands campaign, HC 345-1, Session 1986/87.

Mr. Younger: The Government's response is being published today as Cm. 228.

EMPLOYMENT

School Leavers

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the number of registered unemployed school leavers as of August and those on special schemes; and what were the relevant figures for 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows, for Great Britain, the numbers of unemployed claimants and non claimants aged under 18 years who have not entered employment since completing full-time education, together with all those aged under 18 on the youth opportunities programme and the youth training scheme. The figures are for August of each year from 1983.

August	Unemployed claimants	Non claimants	YOP[1]	YTS[1]
1983	108,990	206,058	100,000	107,400
1984	87,411	156,036	—	277,500
1985	98,132	123,336	—	247,000
1986	90,660	109,037	—	[2]275,100
1987	54,570	112,146	—	[2]398,700

[1] Figures rounded to nearest hundred. YTS is a training scheme, and not a special measure.

[2] These are the latest available figures and are subject to revision.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the total employed labour force in each quarter since January 1970; what has been the total working population in each quarter over the same period; what has the former been as a percentage of the latter throughout this period; and what has been the size of the change in both the employed labour force and the total working population each quarter since 1970.

Mr. Fowler: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Birth Certificates

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Attorney-General how the implementation of the Family Law Reform Act will affect the practice of recording the marital status of parents on the birth certificate.

The Attorney-General: The births register does not record the marital status of a child's parents. Implementation of the Family Law Reform Act 1987 will not alter this position.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Parry asked the Attorney-General what is his latest estimate of the cost to public funds of the court actions designed to prevent publication of Mr. Peter Wright's book, "Spycatcher", and the various related actions, civil and criminal.

The Solicitor-General: The total amount of costs expended to date, including costs in proceedings against certain newspapers and others for criminal contempt of court, is about £314,500.

Mr. Winnick asked the Attorney-General if he will state the total cost to date involved by Her Majesty's Government in legal action in the United Kingdom and abroad in trying to stop the publication of the book "Spycatcher".

The Solicitor-General: The total amount of costs expended to date is about £314,000.

Marcus Garvey

Ms. Abbott asked the Attorney-General why some of the papers relating to Marcus Garvey have been withheld from inspection in the Public Record Office; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Records may be retained by Departments under section 3(4) of the Public Records Act 1958, or may be closed under sections 5(1) and 5(2) of the Act, for longer than the statutory 30-year period. It is not possible to say which provision applies in this instance because it has not been possible to identify the papers from the information given.

Crown Prosecution Service

Ms. Gordon asked the Attorney-General when the report of the review of the Crown Prosecution Service will be made, and by what means it will be published.

The Solicitor-General: The annual report of the Director of Public Prosecutions on the Crown Prosecution

Service for the year 1986-87 was published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office on 13 August 1987. Copies of the report were placed in the Libraries of both Houses on the same date.

WALES

Anglesey Sea Zoo

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance was given by the Wales Tourist Board to the Anglesey sea zoo; who put up the rest of the money; why the assistance was in the form of a grant; and whether he will make provision for the repayment of grants in the case of successful projects on an equitable basis.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Wales Tourist Board has given grant assistance of £22,350. In offering assistance the board must satisfy itself that a project is fully funded, but information on the detail of the package is treated as commercial in confidence. The board provides, in all cases, the minimum assistance it judges necessary if a project is to proceed, and in the form of grant or loan as appropriate to the individual project. Provision now exists for the Wales Tourist Board to offer grants that would be repayable if project returns exceed expectations.

Capitation Allowances

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the increase in capitation allowances by each local education authority in Wales, both primary and secondary, in each of the years 1980-81 to the current year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally.

Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each local education authority, in each of the years 1979-80 to the current year (a) the numbers of (i) primary and (ii) secondary school teachers on temporary contract, (b) the numbers of secondary teachers redeployed to primary schools, (c) the numbers of permanent staff taking early retirement and (d) the numbers of part-time teachers.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Figures on the numbers of teachers on temporary contract and secondary school teachers redeployed are not available. Data on full-time staff moving from secondary to primary schools are, however, given in table A. Table B shows the numbers of staff from maintained schools and colleges of higher and further education taking premature retirement. The numbers of part-time qualified teachers in maintained schools are shown in table C.

Wrexham-Chester Line

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales why the maps of railways in Wales in "Welsh Transport Statistics" No. 3 1987, No. 2 1986 and No. 1 1985 omit the line from Wrexham to Chester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I regret that one of the hon. Gentleman's local railway lines was omitted from the map in "Welsh Transport Statistics".

This will be corrected in the next issue.

Mixed Ability Classes

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many mixed ability classes of more than 30 pupils exist (a) in primary schools in Wales, and (b) in secondary schools in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information in the form requested is not available. However, the number of registered ordinary classes, excluding nursery, special or remedial classes, in excess of 30 pupils totalled 1,552 in primary schools and 1,564 in years 1 to 5 in secondary schools, at September 1986.

Lambs and Sheep (Sale Restrictions)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many lambs and sheep are under restriction for sale in Wales as a result of nuclear accidents in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Statistics

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish as a table in the Official Report contributions made by the United Kingdom to the United Nations Children's Fund for each year since 1975 in £ sterling, in constant 1986 prices, and as an index showing 1980 as 100.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

Year	Contributions at current prices (£ million)			1986 prices (£ million)		1986 prices index
	General Fund	Special Appeals	Total	General Fund	Total	General Fund	Total

[4] Estimates.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish as a table in the Official Report contributions made annually since 1979 to the United Nations Children's Fund by each member country, in constant 1986 prices, showing the contribution per capita of each country as an index showing the United Kingdom as 100.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information, for member states of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development's development assistance committee, is shown in the following tables. Details of all contributions since 1977 can be found in the United Nations Children's Fund document "Contributions from Governments and other Sources to General Resources and for specific purposes in 1986", which has been deposited in the Library of the House.

Mr. Terence Donegan

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to take regarding the pension and other rights of Mr. Terence Donegan, the former Attorney-General of the Turks and Caicos Islands, following his deportation from the islands.

Mr. Chris Patten: Mr. Terence Donegan was employed by the Government of the Turks and Caicos Islands on non-pensionable terms. He has no pension or other outstanding financial entitlements due from Her Majesty's Government as a result of this service.

RMS St. Helena

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is now in a position to accept a tender for the replacement of the RMS St. Helena; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Three bids have been shortlisted and are under consideration. An announcement about the award of the contract will be made as soon as possible.

ENERGY

Electricity Supply Industry

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Energy what specific safety regulations he intends to include in the proposed legislation to privatise the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The electricity supply industry has an excellent safety record and one of our objectives is to ensure that this record is maintained when the industry is transferred to the private sector. The existing electricity supply regulations which cover public safety are currently being reviewed and updated and will form a sound basis for achieving that objective.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has for the future management and continued flexibility of the national grid, subsequent to his planned privatisation of electricity generation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government intend to preserve the existing benefits of the national grid and its flexibility of operation, while ensuring that competing generators have fair and equal access to the transmission system, on terms that are not subject to monopoly abuse.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he expects his plans for privatisation of electricity generation to include private ownership of individual, or groups of nuclear power stations; and what plans he has for the future ownership and operation of British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government intend to bring forward proposals for the privatisation of all the electricity supply industry in due course. There are no plans at present to sell shares in British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Energy what study he has made and what sources of information he will publish, concerning the relative performance of the Central Electricity Generating Board since 1957 and that which he expects from its division into competitive components following privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No decision has yet been taken about the future structure of the electricity industry. The CEGB has published annual reports and accounts, giving details of its performance, since it was established in 1957.

British Coal Property

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of the negotiations between British Coal and the Consortium of Housing Associations led by CIPFA services, over the sale of British Coal houses in Nottinghamshire; and what information he has as to whether British Coal is prepared to accept an offer made by the Consortium which does not meet the market value put on the properties by British Coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that these negotiations are still in progress. I am asking the chairman of British Coal to write to the hon. Member.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether he has any information subsequent to the statement by the then Prime Minister, Sir Alec Douglas-Home, on 2 April 1964, concerning the specific use to which the electricity board Magnox plutonium consigned to the United States has been put since this date; and whether there are any plans for future export of electricity board plutonium to the United States of America;

(2) whether all consignments of plutonium arising from British civil electricity board Magnox reactors and exported to the United States of America have been covered by bilateral peaceful end use restriction nuclear safeguards or International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards;

(3) whether all exports of plutonium arising from British Nuclear Fuels Limited, United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, Central Electricity Generating Board or South of Scotland Electricity Board reactors exported to the United States since May 1979 have been covered by peaceful end use safeguards.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1987, c. 516-17]: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) on 19 May 1986, at column 31, and by my right hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Walker) on 2 July 1984, at column 36.

There are no current plans to export electricity board plutonium to the USA.

Mr. Mullin asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish all evidence or papers submitted by his Department to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1987, c. 520]: The Department has submitted no written evidence or papers to RWMAC in the last five years.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will publish a weekly input/output table from 1 January of spent Magnox fuel arising from civil Magnox reactors, together with the arisings of resulting depleted uranium and plutonium stocks for the throughput at the Windscale B205 reprocessing plant at British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield;

(2) why he will not publish input/output details of spent Magnox reactor fuel and depleted uranium/plutonium stocks at Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1987, c. 520]: I refer the hon Member to the answer given on 24 July 1987 to the hon Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) at columns 515-16. It would not be in the national interest to give this information on a more frequent basis.

Coal Industry

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many manshifts were worked by persons on British Coal Corporation colliery books in 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Spicer [Pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1987, c. 518]: The total number of deep-mined revenue manshifts worked during 1986-87 was 26,407,000.

TRANSPORT

Orbital Rail Services

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, consequent to the traffic flows current on the M25 motorway, he will investigate the possibility of developing new orbital rail services in or adjacent to the Greater London area on existing or new lengths of track.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for British Rail and London Regional Transport to assess potential demand for rail services, and to bring forward proposals.

London Air Traffic Control Centre

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the security of the London air traffic control centre at West Drayton;

(2) how many trained (a) engineers and (b) other professional staff have left the London air traffic control centre in each of the past five years;

(3) if he will make a statement on the Civil Aviation Authority's plans for the development of the new air traffic control facility at West Drayton;

(4) what reports he has received from the Civil Aviation Authority concerning (a) loss of radar pictures, (b) radio interference and (c) telephone failure at the London air traffic control centre; if he has received any proposals from the Civil Aviation Authority for new equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Responsibility for the operation and management of the London air traffic control centre rests with the National Air Traffic Services, which is controlled jointly by the Civil Aviation Authority and the Ministry of Defence. Security and staffing are not matters for which my right hon Friend is responsible.

The authority has been implementing a modernisation and re-equipment programme at the centre for some years and this will continue. Proposals for further re-equipment, new systems and for a new centre for which Government approval is required, will be submitted to my right hon Friend by the authority as and when the plans for them are sufficiently advanced.

Roads (Contractors)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the requirements he makes of contractors for road reconstruction or improvements in respect of minimum flows of traffic that can be accommodated at peak periods.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our policy is to ensure that the maximum volume of traffic consistent with safety and operational constraints can pass through the site of reconstruction or improvement works. The traffic management arrangements necessary to secure this are agreed in consultation with the police and local highway authorities. Any special requirements, such as minimum number of lanes to be kept open during specified periods of the year, are written into contract documents. We keep arrangements under review.

Hovercraft

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the use of his discretion in respect of the powers of exemption contained in paragraph 32 of the Hovercraft Order 1972.

Mr. David Mitchell: Representations have been received for exemption using the powers in paragraph 32 of the Hovercraft Order 1972 by and on behalf of Commander Peter Corson, designer of the AIRMARAN, a prototype hovercraft.

Railways (Safety)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will request the Inspector General of Railways to make studies of (a) all safety and operational aspects of the first two months of operation of the Docklands light railway and (b) the introduction of one-person operation on the Piccadilly line of the London underground; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The arrangements for one person operation on the Piccadilly line were examined and met the criteria jointly agreed between London Underground Limited and the Railway Inspectorate. The Chief Inspecting Officer of Railways receives reports of notifiable accidents on any railway, including the Docklands light railway, and investigates them as necessary, but the responsibility for the safe running and operation of all railways rests entirely with their managements. However, their safety of operation is kept under review and the Chief Inspecting Officer's latest annual report, for 1986, on the safety record of the railways in Great Britain is being published tomorrow. There is therefore no need for the special studies requested by the hon. Member.

Bus Services (Deregulation)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what timetable he expects to follow concerning deregulation of bus services in the area served by London Regional Transport; and if he will state the evidence on which he bases his decision.

Mr. David Mitchell: As I told the annual conference of the Bus and Coach Council on 13 October, I expect to see bus users in London in the early 1990s enjoying the same benefits of deregulation as those outside. I have not finished considering the timetable.

British Rail

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the routes and services of the British Railways Board whose future has been the subject of recent consultation; if he will state for each the estimated savings calculated to accrue from closure of the route or withdrawal of the service, together with the basis of the calculations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The objectives which the Government set the British Railways Board last October require it to review those cases where attractive bus services could meet the needs of travellers as conveniently and often at markedly less cost than the present rail services before investing in new rolling stock for them. We have yet to discuss with the board how it is following up that requirement.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will direct the British Railways Board to adopt customer service standards that will include halving the present charge for left luggage lockers and a maximum wait of 10 minutes for the purchase of tickets or the deposit or withdrawal of left luggage.

Mr. David Mitchell: One of the quality of service targets which my right hon. Friend agreed for the British Railways Board last June was that passengers should have to queue at ticket offices for no longer than three minutes off peak and five minutes during peak periods. Arrangements for left-luggage facilities are entirely a matter for the board.

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the chairman of British Rail the deteriorating state of the local trains used on the service from West Drayton to Paddington and the need for their replacement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that British Rail will shortly submit a case for replacing the rolling stock on this service. I shall consider its case as quickly as practicable when I receive it.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates are available to him concerning the cost of the proposed east London river crossing for each of the following specifications: (a) four-lane suspension bridge, (b) six-lane suspension bridge, (c) dual tunnels of two lanes each and (d) dual tunnels of three lanes each; and if he will make a statement concerning the respective merits of bridge and tunnels at this site.

Mr. Channon: The estimates as presented to the public inquiry, updated to June 1987 prices, are:

Cable stayed bridge, dual two-lane with wide hard margins (which could be marked out as three lanes)—£69·75 million including preparation and supervision.

Dual two-lane tunnel—£85·4 million including preparation and supervision. No estimates have been made of the cost of a full dual three-lane bridge or dual three-lane tunnel.

Until we have received the inspector's report, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I have considered the recommendations, it would not be proper for me to comment on the respective merits of a bridge or tunnel at this site.

Night Flying (Heathrow)

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy with regard to the continuation of existing restrictions on night flying at London, Heathrow airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Night flights at Heathrow airport will continue to be restricted. We expect to publish a consultation document containing our proposals for future night restrictions policy for Heathrow early next month.

Gatwick Airport (Unscheduled Diversions)

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals to avoid unscheduled diversions from Gatwick airport to Stansted or Luton.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Decisions to divert on operational grounds are a matter for aircraft commanders and airline operators.

Victoria Coach Station

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the future location and management of the main London coach station, currently at Victoria.

Mr. David Mitchell: In September 1985 London Regional Transport, at the then Secretary of State's request, commissioned consultants to examine current and future terminal requirements for express coach services in London. The consultant's report, which is available in the Library, recommended that a major new terminal should be developed at Paddington. I announced on 17 November last year that I was not persuaded by the consultants' report that a single hub terminal was necessarily the right solution, and that the arguments should be properly aired in public before a decision was taken. LRT is now working on its proposals for a new coach terminal at Paddington, and I expect these proposals to be considered at a wide-ranging public inquiry next year.

I regard it as important that the public inquiry should be able to consider all the various strategies for coach stations in London, including the possibility that the evidence presented to the inquiry will suggest there is a continuing long-term role for Victoria coach station. I have therefore concluded that the existing coach station should remain in the public sector for the time being. In order that it can continue to operate if necessary unaffected by the eventual dissolution of the National Bus Company, I have decided that this can be best achieved by transferring its ownership to London Regional Transport. LRT and NBC are now discussing the most appropriate means of achieving this objective.

Motorways (Roadworks)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a weekly map or diagram showing the locations and extent of scheduled roadworks and diversions on all motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are seldom planned diversions. The present arrangements for informing road users of roadworks include fortnightly announcements in the national press and continuous Teletext and Oracle information with diagrams. We are also conducting an experimental teletext service at four motorway service areas on the M1 using specially designed dedicated pages.

A595 (Egremont Bypass)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange for work on the A595 Egremont bypass to commence in the next financial year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall build the new road as soon as possible.

Statutory orders for the line of the new road and alterations to side roads were published on 12 October. A compulsory purchase order will be advertised early next year. Progress will depend on the strength of objection to these orders and the necessity for a public inquiry.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Disabled People

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations have been received from the Northern Ireland Council on Disability and other organisations and individuals on improving the situation of disabled people in employment; what has been the response of his Department; and whether he will meet representatives of the Northern Ireland Council on Disability.

Mr. Viggers: The Department of Economic Development regularly meets the Northern Ireland Council on Disability and other organisations to discuss improvements in the situation of disabled people in employment. Recently the council responded to the Consultative Paper "Equality of Opportunity in Employment in Northern Ireland" and arrangements are being made to meet with the council to discuss its response. As my right hon. Friend told the House on 15 July 1987, at cols. 490-91, the promotion of equality of opportunity in relation to disability will continue to be addressed in Northern Ireland in the same way as in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the number of disabled peple employed by the largest private sector employer in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The largest private sector employer in Northern Ireland employs 38 registered disabled people.

London Refurbishing Company Ltd.

Mr. McGrady asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement regarding the breakdown of negotiations between the Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland and the London Refurbishing Company Ltd.; and what action he intends to take to retrieve this loss of employment opportunity in the Greater Belfast area.

Mr. Viggers: It is not the policy nor the usual practice of the Industrial Development Board to comment on negotiations carried out in confidence with companies, whatever the outcome of those negotiations. However, in this case it is already a matter of public record that the Industrial Development Board has declined to provide selective assistance to the London Refurbishing Co. Ltd. to purchase the ex-DeLorean factory in Dunmurry and to establish a project involving the manufacture of furniture. It is also a matter of public record that several concerns, including the undischarged bankruptcy of the project's promoter and his convictions for a number of serious criminal offences, led the board to conclude that the project should not be offered selective assistance. The ex-DeLorean factory is now being offered for sale on the open market. The Industrial Development Board will continue its intensive efforts to promote new employment opportunities in the Greater Belfast area and indeed in all areas of Northern Ireland.

Clerical Officers

Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many clerical officers (clerks) were, at 31 March, employed for duty on the wards at (a) Craigavon area hospital, (b) Daisy Hill hospital and (c) South Tyrone hospital;

(2) how many clerical officers (clerks) were, at 31 March, employed for duty in the accident and emergency department at (a) Craigavon area hospital, (b) Daisy Hill hospital and (c) South Tyrone hospital.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Clerks employed in accident and emergency departments and wards at 31 March 1987

Cross-frontier Incursions

Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many protests have been lodged by Her Majesty's Government with the Government of the Irish Republic since 15 November 1985 concerning cross-frontier incursions by the army of the Irish Republic or the Gardai; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I understand how easy it is for members of the security forces operating near the border to make mistakes and accidentally stray outside their respective jurisdictions, as has happened in the case of the security forces of both countries. Since 15 November 1985 the Government have brought to the attention of the Government of the Republic of Ireland 16 occasions in which members of the Irish security forces have allegedly crossed the border into Northern Ireland. Of these, the Irish authorities have admitted two, 13 have been denied and one is under investigation.

Security Statistics

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the security statistics for the first half of 1987 are now available, together with details of persons charged with terrorist-type offences and convictions for scheduled offences for the year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I regret that the statistics given to the hon. Member in my answer on 24 July at columns 631-36 were incomplete.

The statistics requested by the hon. Member are available, together with those since 1971, and are as follows:

1. The offence classifications are based on those used by the Crown and Peace Office in its annual return.
2. The tables relate to persons convicted at the Belfast Crown court. This covers all scheduled offences tried on indictment.
3. Some jury trials are included in cases where the Attorney General certified out of the scheduled mode of trial, ie non-terrorist serious offences.
4. Where a person had been convicted of more than one offence only the most serious or that which received the longest sentence is recorded in the statistics.

Insurance Claims (Legal Costs)

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation to require those pursuing, or proposing to pursue, insurance claims by legal action in Northern Ireland to contribute towards their legal costs in cases where out-of-court settlements are reached in their favour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: There are no plans to interfere with the principle that where actions are settled out of court the terms of the settlement, including the question of costs, are a matter for agreement between the plaintiff and defendant to the action.

Terrorism

Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) for how many of the 178 terrorist killings in

Fermanagh and South Tyrone between 9 February 1971 and 6 October 1986 anyone had been made amenable for murder by 27 October 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if anyone has been made amenable since 27 October 1986 for each of the terrorist murders in Fermanagh and South Tyrone unsolved at that time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I shall reply shortly.

Mr. Magginis asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish e app Republican Army of Ivan Crawford in Fermanagh on 9 January;

(2) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of George Shaw in South Tyrone on 26 January;

(3) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of James Oldman in Fermanagh on 3 April;

(4) if anyone has been made amenable for the murder claimed to have been committed by the Irish Republican Army of Thomas Hewitt in Fermanagh on 19 July.

Mr. Stanley: There have been no charges brought nor convictions secured in the United Kingdom in relation to any of these murders, but one person has been charged in the Republic of Ireland in relation to the murder of Lance Corporal Thomas Hewitt on 19 July 1987.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands

16. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Government of the Falkland Islands in the last three months.

Mr. Eggar: The Falkland Islands Government have made no representations over the past three months, although, of course, they have been in contact with us on a range of issues.

55. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to take on the United Nations General Assembly resolution on the Falklands.

Mr. Eggar: Last year's resolution, like previous resolutions since 1982, failed to take account of the Falkland Islanders' right to self-determination. In the event of a similar resolution being tabled this year, our position is unchanged. Sovereignty is not negotiable.

Spain

21. Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's relations with Spain.

Mrs. Chalker: Following Spain's entry to the European Community in January 1986 and her decision later that year to remain in NATO, relations between the United Kingdom are closer than they have been for very many years. King Juan Carlos visited the United Kingdom last year and Her Majesty the Queen has accepted an invitation to go to Spain next year.

Saudi Arabia

22. Mr. Quentin Davis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's relations with the kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Mellor: Our relations with Saudi Arabia are excellent. There have been a number of high-level visits this year. King Fahd paid a most welcome state visit to London in March and His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester paid a successful visit to Saudi Arabia this month. I hope to visit the kingdom later this year.

Middle East

23. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit the middle east.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend plans to visit Egypt from 29 October to 1 November and Jordan from 1 to 3 November.

31. Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet his Israeli counterpart to discuss the implications for a possible settlement of the middle east conflict of the human rights position of the Palestinians on the west bank and the Gaza strip.

Mr. Mellor: The Arab-Israel dispute and the situation in the occupied territories were among the subjects my right hon. and learned Friend discussed with Mr. Peres in New York on 22 September. My right hon. and learned Friend does not know when he will next see him. But we shall continue to discuss these questions with the Israelis.

Government Communications Centre

25. Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason it is proposed that staff working in the new Government communications centre in London should forfeit union membership; what financial and other inducements will be offered; if those who decline such inducements will incur disciplinary measures; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As my right hon. Friend, the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker) told the House on 15 January 1987, at columns 262-63, it is not our intention to extend the measures introduced at the Government communications headquarters beyond those agencies whose primary functions are concerned with security and intelligence.

Chile

26. Dr. Reid asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken to monitor the situation in relation to exiles returning to Chile from the United Kingdom; and what has been the result.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's embassy has approached the Chilean authorities, on humanitarian grounds, to make clear our concerns. Her Majesty's ambassador and his staff in Santiago have been instructed to maintain contact with former exiles and other Chileans who have returned to Chile from the United Kingdom and to monitor their treatment. These arrangements have been welcomed by returning Chileans and by human rights organisations.

47 Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his European Economic Community counterparts about the current human rights situation in Chile.

Mr. Eggar: Human rights in Chile are the subject of regular and frequent review within the framework of European political co-operation. The Twelve last issued a statement on the subject on 9 October, the text of which has been deposited in the Library of the House.

Belize

28 Mr. James Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Belize about the United Kingdom garrison there.

Mr. Eggar: We have regular discussions about the garrison with the Government of Belize. The situation is unchanged. The garrison will remain for an appropriate period.

Soviet Union

29 Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent meetings he has had with his Soviet counterpart; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Mellor: My right and learned Friend met Mr Shevardnadze in New York on 22 September. They discussed arms control, regional issues including the situation in the Gulf, and bilateral matters.

Contadora Peace Process

30 Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for the Contadora peace process of Soviet policy towards Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: The continuing supply of Soviet arms to Nicaragua is unhelpful to the peace process and is incompatible with the Contadora objective of reducing arms levels in the region—an objective which has been accepted by both the Soviet Union and Nicaragua.

KMS Ltd.

24. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about KMS Ltd. and its former contracts for the protection of British diplomats overseas.

Mr. Eggar: We have received a number of representations in the recent past including some from hon. Members, and Members of another place.

India

32. Sir George Young asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to pay an official visit to India.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to visit India at present. Since his last visit to India in 1986, there have been regular opportunities for discussions with Indian Ministers, most recently at the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Vancouver.

Argentina

33. Mr. Heffer asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communication he has had with the Government of Argentina regarding diplomatic relations beween the two countries.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts have been made with the Argentine Government and what progress has been made towards an understanding on avoiding incidents in South Atlantic fishing waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Following my right hon. and learned Friend's statement to the House on 29 October 1986, we received some informal ideas from the Argentines, via the United States Government, which relate exclusively to the co-ordination of fisheries management in the interests of conservation and the avoidance of incidents. We have replied using the same channel. The exchange continues.

Gibraltar

34. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on his discussions with the Foreign Minister of Spain regarding issues relating to Gibraltar.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the Spanish Foreign Minister at regular intervals, in the context of the Brussels agreement of 27 November 1984. The next meeting will take place on 30 November and 1 December.

40. Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make an official visit to Gibraltar.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so at present.

Nicaragua

35. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to pay an official visit to Nicaragua.

59. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to pay an official visit to Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to visit Nicaragua.

Kenya

36. Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to visit Kenya.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans to visit Kenya.

Hungary

37. Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to pay an official visit to Hungary.

Mr. Mellor: I visited Hungary in September and my right hon. and learned Friend did so in March. We hope that Mr. Varkonyi, the Hungarian Foreign Minister, will pay a return visit next year; and that visits by Ministers and senior officials from both countries will continue at regular intervals.

Arms Control

38. Mr. Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest programme in arms control negotiations.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Prospects for a United States-Soviet agreement on intermediate nuclear force missiles are encouraging. A number of key issues, including verification, remain to be resolved

We are participating in talks in Vienna to agree the framework for negotiations on conventional stability covering the Atlantic to the Urals.

Negotiations on chemical weapons have made progress. But considerable complexities remain.

Honduras and Nicaragua

39. Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice his Department issues to United Kingdom nationals wishing to travel to (a) Honduras and (b) Nicaragua.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice Her Majesty's Government are currently giving to United Kingdom nationals intending to visit (a) Honduras and (b) Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: United Kingdom nationals intending to visit Nicaragua and Honduras are advised to avoid border areas and to register their presence with Her Majesty's embassy on arrival. They should also follow the advice of Her Majesty's embassy and of the local authorities about avoiding areas of particular danger.

Kuwaiti Tankers (Reflagging)

41. Mr. Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about his consideration of the possibility of the British reflagging of Kuwaiti tankers in the Persian gulf.

Mr. Mellor: In present circumstances any developments in the Gulf are likely to have political implications and we have been carefully monitoring the registration of merchant shipping.

Under current British regulations the entering of a vessel on the United Kingdom register is a matter of meeting certain well-known criteria and does not require a decision by the Government. We have informed the Kuwaitis of the limitations to the operating area of the Armilla patrol and to the assistance which British flag vessels may expect from it.

INF Talks

42. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in the intermediate nuclear force weapons talks.

57. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about progress towards concluding an intermediate nuclear force agreement.

Mr. Mellor: The eighth round of the United States-Soviet negotiations on intermediate nuclear missiles began on 23 April and is still in session. The negotiators have said they will continue their talks until they reach agreement. There are still some crucial issues to be resolved, including the question of verification and the phasing of reductions.

Arms Reductions

43. Mr. Simon Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about talks on mutual and balanced force reductions.

Mr. Mellor: We continue to take a full and active part in the negotiations on mutual and balanced force reductions in Vienna. Progress has been disappointing owing to the unwillingness of the Warsaw pact to provide adequate data on force levels or to respond to Western proposals on verification. We shall continue to press the Warsaw pact to respond positively to the Western proposal of December 1985 in which we made a constructive attempt to break the long-standing deadlock by offering to accept reductions in United States and Soviet troops before agreement on force levels.

Latin America

44. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what official visits have been made by Ministers in his Department to Latin America in the past three months.

Mr. Eggar: My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development visited Mexico and Belize between 19 and 26 September.

Single European Act

45. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the operation of the single European Act in European Economic Community decision making.

Mrs. Chalker: The Single European Act entered into force on 1 July. By extending the use of qualified majority voting it will make it easier to secure the adoption of measures needed to complete the single market in goods and services, a longstanding United Kingdom objective. Its main effect so far has been to enable a common position to be reached by the Council on standards for vehicle emissions, a measure supported by the United Kingdom, which was previously blocked by the unanimity requirement.

Persian Gulf

46. Mr. Andrew Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the current initiatives to prevent a further escalation of violence in the gulf.

Mr. Mellor: We played a leading role in the adoption of SCR 598 by the Security Council on 20 July. We have made it plain to Iran and Iraq that they have an obligation to accept this resolution, in particular, a ceasefire, and that recalcitrance will lay them open to enforcement measures. We support the efforts of the Secretary General to obtain implementation of SCR 598, and favour parallel work on an arms embargo, in case this should prove necessary.

Caribbean Dependent Territories

27. Mr. Dunnachie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of his review of the position of the Caribbean dependent territories.

Mr. Eggar: The review has just been completed and is currently being considered. We hope to make an announcement shortly.

South Africa

48. Mr. David Martin asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives he intends to take on South Africa.

62. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government propose to take any new intitiatives with regard to South Africa in the coming months.

Mrs. Chalker: In keeping with our goal of the total abolition of apartheid, we shall continue to promote dialogue between the parties leading to negotiations for fundamental change.

58. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the South African Government about the situation in South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We have repeatedly made known to the South African Government our concern about aspects of the situation in South Africa. We have done so on several occasions recently, both in London and in Cape Town.

Afghanistan

49. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations with Afghanistan.

52. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for East-West relations of the continuing Soviet occupation of Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: The Soviet occupation of Afghanistan has caused tens of thousands of deaths and driven 5 million refugees to leave their country. We regard Soviet willingness to make the necessary decisions to end the occupation as an important test of their commitment to "new thinking" and better international relations.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the British chargé d'affaires in Kabul was summoned to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 12 July; what was said by the Afghanistan Government; what action was taken; and on how many occasions since the chargé d'affaires has been summoned.

Mr. Eggar: Diplomatic exchanges are normally confidential. However, Pravda and the Kabul New Times on 14 July published accounts of a note of 12 July from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Kabul to the British chargé d'affaires, which he had declined to accept.

Terrorism

50. Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives he intends to take with the United Kingdom's European Community partners against international terrorism.

Mr. Mellor: We are firmly committed to fight against international terrorism and are fully aware of the need for international co-operation to prevent and combat it. We shall, in co-operation with our partners, pursue any new initiatives which help strengthen and improve this co-operation while at the same time continuing to urge partners to fulfil commitments and undertakings already made. We shall continue to play an active part in relevant international organisations to secure and maintain a common, firm approach.

Arms Sales

51. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received about the foreign policy implications of United Kingdom arms sales abroad.

Mr. Mellor: From time to time we receive representations on matters relating to British arms exports from right hon. and hon. Members and from the public; none, however, about the foreign policy implications of such sales.

Iraq-Iran War

53. Mr. Patrick McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the effects of the conflict between Iraq and Iran.

Mr. Mellor: We remain deeply concerned about the continuation of this appalling conflict, the associated danger to shipping in the Gulf and the destabilising effect it is having on the whole region. We are active within the United Nations and bilaterally to try to reduce the level of tension, and to obtain implementation of SCR 598 leading to a peaceful settlement.

Falklands Fishery Protection Service

54. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions his Department has had regarding the Falkland Islands Fishery Protection Service.

Mr. Eggar: This Department has regular discussions with the Falkland Islands Government over the fishery protection service. The service is working well; there have been no major incidents.

Hong Kong

17. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the latest programme in implementing the transitional arrangements in Hong Kong.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Implementation of the Sino-British joint declaration on Hong Kong is proceeding well. Both sides are working closely together to implement its provisions fully and faithfully. The next meeting of the Sino-British joint liaison group will take place in Peking from 10 to 13 November.

Turks and Caicos Islands

56. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards the return of elected government in the Turks and Caicos Islands.

Mr. Eggar: Useful talks were held in London from 1 to 3 September with political leaders and other representatives of the Turks and Caicos Islands. These reached broad agreement on modalities for a return to elected government which is now expected to be achieved in February-March 1988.

Refuseniks

60. Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of applications for exit visas of those refuseniks whose names he raised with the Soviet Union Foreign Minister in April.

Mr. Mellor: Forty four of the 97 refuseniks whose cases my right hon. and learned Friend raised with Mr. Shevardnadze have now received exit visas.

South Korea

61. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's relations with the Republic of South Korea.

Mr. Eggar: Our relations with the Republic of Korea are good. In particular, we welcome the progress being made there towards a more representative system of government. We should also like to achieve further development in bilateral commercial relations and are pressing for greater liberalisation of trade and further protection for intellectual property.

Western Sahara

63. Mr. Kilfedder asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will invite representatives of the Polisario Front to meet him in the autumn to discuss the future of the Western Sahara; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No. We do not take sides in the Western Sahara dispute and fully support the efforts of the UN Secretary-General to bring about a peaceful solution.

Mr. Douglas Forsyth

64. Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the refusal of the Egyptian courts to recognise Mr. Douglas Forsyth's claim to possession of his villa in Cairo, sequestrated by the Egyptian Government following the Suez crisis in 1956, and the failure of Her Majesty's Government's efforts to protect his interests, Her Majesty's Government will now consider making an ex gratia payment to compensate him for his loss of possession and enjoyment of the villa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. The question of an ex gratia payment has been considered in the past and was discussed when I met my hon. Friend the Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) and Mr. Forsyth on 26 November 1986. The position remains that Her Majesty's Government do not accept that they have in any way failed to protect Mr. Forsyth's interests nor that there is a case for the payment of compensation.

Her Majesty's ambassador at Cairo and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have been very active on Mr. Forsyth's behalf in the past and will continue to afford him every assistance in the future. It is understood that the occupancy of the villa is still the subject of legal action before the Egyptian courts.

Aid Statistics

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total value in constant prices of all contributions made by Her Majesty's Government to all United Nations agencies since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Klaus Barbie

Mr. Allason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in the light of the recent conviction in the French courts of Klaus Barbie, he will reconsider his policy relating to the relevant files now retained by his Department and release them to the Public Record Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

Rudolf Hess

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which Rudolf Hess met his death; what inquiries were undertaken to establish what occurred during the time Hess was left on his own; and why it was decided that Hess's body should be disposed of differently from those of other Nazi war criminals who were never released from imprisonment or who were executed after the war.

Mrs. Chalker: The four powers responsible for Spandau prison carried out a thorough investigation into the circumstances of Rudolf Hess's death, including a full autopsy and inquiries by the special investigation branch of the Royal Military Police. As statements issued by the allied authorities in Berlin on 24 August and 17 September made clear, these investigations established beyond doubt that Rudolf Hess committed suicide by hanging himself with an electrical extension cord, and that the cause of death was asphyxiation.

There was no unified procedure after the war for the disposal of the remains of Nazi war criminals who were executed or died in custody. The decision that Hess's body should, as an act of humanity, be handed over to his family after his death was taken by the four powers some time after the war.

UNESCO

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will use the occasion of the election of a new director-general of UNESCO in November to rejoin that organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Our concern with the state of UNESCO has never been based on personalities. We made it clear when we withdrew from the organisation that we would require evidence of fundamental and far-reaching reforms before reconsidering our position. The appointment of a new director-general is no more than one element in the task of tackling the formidable problems that face the organisation. We shall continue to keep an open mind and monitor developments carefully.

Parking fines

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish up-to-date figures indicating the number of unpaid parking fines incurred by each diplomatic mission in the first six months of 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested by my hon. Friend is given in the table. The table also includes those international organisations which have incurred unpaid fines. The figures may be reduces by late payment.

The total for the first six months of 1987 indicates a 20 per cent. reduction over the same period of 1986. I have written personally to the heads of the 10 missions with the most unpaid fines during the period in question. They are France, Saudi Arabia, Oman, Egypt, Iraq, Quatar, United Arab Emirates, Soviet Union, Spain and Pakistan. These missions account for 38 per cent. of the total.

We welcome the further significant reduction in unpaid parking fines that has been achieved this year. We are looking for further reductions and hope for early results from the action I have taken with the top 10 offending missions.

Parking fixed penalty notices cancelled on the grounds of diplomatic immunity (metropolitan police district)

SCOTLAND

Scottish Transport Group

Mr. Worthington asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many staff were employed by each of the constituent bus companies of the Scottish Transport Group on 30 June.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Transport Group has provided the following information as of 12 July, being the nearest available date:

Company	Staff employed (12 July 1987)
Central Scottish Omnibuses	1,346
Clydeside Scottish Omnibuses	1,334
Eastern Scottish Omnibuses	1,372
Fife Scottish Omnibuses	792
Highland Scottish Omnibuses	352
Kelvin Scottish Omnibuses	1,182
Lowland Scottish Omnibuses	256
Midland Scottish Omnibuses	775
Northern Scottish Omnibuses	687
Strathtay Scottish Omnibuses	480
Western Scottish Omnibuses	920
Scottish Citylink Coaches	223

Hypothermia

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of deaths in Scotland from hypothermia for each month since January 1981 broken down by age group.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Local Authority Services (Private Contractors)

Mr. John Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many Scottish local authorities have invited tenders for (a) street cleansing, (b) refuse collection and (c) the provision of school meals; and what information he has as to how the outside tenders compared with those of in-house direct labour organisations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not collected centrally.

Lambs and Sheep (Sale Restrictions)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many lambs and sheep are under restriction for sale in Scotland as a result of nuclear accidents in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Nuclear Accidents (Monitoring)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals or representations he has received regarding a programme of systematic whole-body monitoring of people in the areas affected by the Chernobyl fallout to replace the voluntary programme presently undertaken by the Scottish universities research and reactor centre at East Kilbride; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will arrange for a copy of the report prepared for his Department, entitled "Preparation of a Specification of User Requirements for the System of Community Charge in Scotland," to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Rifkind: A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Deportees

Mr. Bernie Grant asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been deported under section 86 of the Mental Health Act since 1983; and to which countries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Two patients have been removed under this section, one to Bangladesh and the other to the United States of America. Both removals took place earlier this year.

Citizenship

Mr. Bernie Grant asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people who have applied for naturalisation or registration as British citizens under the British Nationality Act 1981 have had their applications refused as being of unsound mind; and if he will provide a breakdown of those figures by (a) ethnicity and (b) sex.

Mr. Renton: Between July 1986 and September 1987 three applications for naturalisation as British citizens had been recorded as refused on the ground that the applicant was of unsound mind. Earlier figures for naturalisation and figures for registrations are not readily available and records are not kept relating refused applications to ethnicity or sex.

Prison Staff

Mr. Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prison officer staffing grades which were unfilled at Wandsworth prison on 7 July.

Mr. John Patten: On 7 July the number of officers in post was 80 below the staffing level authorised for a 39-hour week. Under present systems, most officers would work more hours on overtime.

Mr. Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what extra staff are to be allocated to London prisons following the introduction of Fresh Start.

Mr. John Patten: Fresh Start was agreed with the unions on the basis that efficiency could be improved through better management structures and working methods. Work is still in hand on implementation. Some 1,800 officers are being recruited to the prison service this year, of whom about 750 are specifically to implement Fresh Start. The number allocated to each establishment will be based on the requirement to obtain an average of 10 per cent. efficiency gains this year across the prison service.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times in the last three months the Governor of Wandsworth prison has declared a limited alert; for what reasons this was done; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In the three months up to 13 October a limited alert was declared on the following occasions:

Saturday 18 July
Saturday 25 July
Sunday 26 July
Saturday 1 August

Each was due to the absence of staff during the summer leave period.

Offensive Weapons

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will hold consultations with chief constables to consider with them appropriate measures to restrict the increase in the carrying of knives by young people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: During our recent study of how the law relating to the possession of knives might be reinforced we held consultations with chief officers of police. I now intend to bring forward in the Criminal Justice Bill, proposals which would make it an offence for a person to have a bladed or sharply pointed article in a public place without good reason or lawful authority. I also intend to bring forward proposals which will enable the sale of specified weapons for which there is no legitimate use to be banned.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in how many cases in each of the last 10 years involving grievous bodily harm, actual bodily harm, malicious wounding or assault, respectively, the victim was threatened or attacked with a knife;

(2) whether he will order a statistical analysis of crimes committed in the United Kingdom with use of knives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the use of weapons other than firearms is not collected centrally, except for offences of homicide. Statistics of homicides are published each year in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 4.3 in the volume for 1985 (Cm. 10)). Statistics of offences of violence against the person and robberies involving weapons recorded by the Metropolitan police are published each year by the commissioner in his annual report (tables A2 and B3 in appendix 4iii of the issue for 1986, (Cm. 158)).

Television Licences

Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many search warrants were granted in Northern Ireland in each year since 1957, up to 11 February, permitting the National Television Licence Records Office inquiry officers to gain access to private premises for the purpose of examining television receiving equipment;

(2) how many prosecutions for failure to hold a valid television licence were successfully brought in Northern Ireland using evidence provided by detector vans, in each year since 1957;

(3) what information he has as to how many television detector vans are presently stationed in Northern Ireland and as to the approximate value of (a) these vehicles and (b) the electronic equipment contained in them; what has been the cost of replacement and maintenance of these vehicles since 1 January 1980; how many permanent staff are employed to operate these vehicles; and what has been the cost of staffing them since 1 January 1980.

Mr. Renton: Prior to December 1986, when the reorganisation of the Television Licensing Organisation in Northern Ireland was completed, search warrants were not sought in Northern Ireland in connection with suspected television licence evasion. Between then and 11 February, three search warrants were sought and granted. Detector van equipment has not been used in Northern Ireland and no detector vans are presently stationed there. Two vans previously used for transporting inquiry officers were removed in June 1987.

Motorists (Blood Tests)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to give motorists a statutory opportunity to give a blood sample as an alternative to an evidential breath test by intoximeter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under section 8(6) of the Road Traffic Act 1972 (as amended) any person whose result on an evidential breath testing device is no more than 50 microgrammes of alcohol per 100 millilitres of breath has the right to request a blood or urine test. Since April 1984 a similar option has been available on a non-statutory basis to persons with a breath test reading over 50 microgrammes and we will be reviewing this non-statutory option in the autumn of next year.

Grendon Prison

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners have been allocated to Her Majesty's prison Grendon since 1 July 1987; and how many of these prisoners are expected to benefit from the psychiatric regime of the prison;

(2) what affect he estimates the presence of a high proportion of rule 43 prisoners in the Grendon population will have on the maintenance of the present regime for those with psychiatric needs;

(3) if he will take steps to ensure that the Prison Department reverts to a policy of allocating prisoners to Her Majesty's prison Grendon only on psychiatric need; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Since July this year one wing at Grendon prison has been dedicated to the accommodation of rule 43 prisoners transferred from other establishments in the south-east region. This was one of a number of measures which we have taken recently to make the best use of available accommodation in the light of the current high levels of overcrowding in other prisons. This did not entail any reduction in the number of prisoners already at Grendon taking part in the therapeutic regime.

Since 1 July this year 128 prisoners have been allocated to Grendon prison. Of these, 70 rule 43 prisoners will not benefit directly from the therapeutic regime of the prison. The remaining 58 will. Rule 43 prisoners, currently comprising 22 per cent. of the Grendon population, are held separately from other prisoners and do not detract from the psychiatric regime which remains as the establishment's primary purpose. It is not the intention to end the accommodation of rule 43 prisoners at Grendon while other prisons suitable for them are as crowded as they are now.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list (a) the members of the Equal Opportunities Commission, (b) the criteria for selection of members, (c) the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places and (e) how many Trades Union Congress-nominated places are held by women.

Mr. John Patten: The following are members of the commission:

Baroness Platt of Writtle—Chairman
Mrs. June O'Dell—Deputy Chairman
Mr. Kenneth Boardman
Mrs. Rosemary Brown
Mr. James Dunlop
Mr. Dennis Guereca
Miss Margaret Monk
Professor Gillian Powell
Mrs. Margaret Prosser
Mr. Andrew Simpkin
Baroness Turner of Camden
Mrs. Pat Turner
Mrs. Esme Walker
Dame Anne Warburton

Members are appointed on the basis of the qualifications and experience they can bring to the work of the commission to enable it to carry out its duties under parts VI and VII of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975. The present members have a wide experience in employment, education and the law. Three members were nominated by the Trades Union Congress, of whom all are women.

Winson Green Prison

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have served prison sentences of less than one week at Winson Green prison, Birmingham, since November 1986.

Mr. John Patten: According to the records held centrally, about 70 persons were initially received into Birmingham prison in the period 1 December 1986 to 31 August 1987 to serve sentences of less than one week.

Electoral Register

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated accuracy of the coverage of the electoral register as a percentage of those eligible to register.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The most recent estimate of the accuracy of the electoral register nationwide was produced by the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys in its survey "Electoral Registration in 1981", which found that, in 1981, 6·5 per cent. of eligible people in Great Britain were not included in the electoral register for their qualifying address. The OPCS's survey of six inner city areas in 1983 to 1984, published last August, found that, in 1984, between 4 and 17 per cent. of eligible people were not included. The Home Office has taken a range of initiatives aimed at increasing the accuracy of the electoral register and we shall be continuing to work for improvements.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were brought in the latest year for which figures are available in respect of failure to register as an elector.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information held centrally, which may be incomplete, indicates that there was one prosecution in 1985. No figures of prosecutions are yet available for 1986.

Prisoners (Citizenship)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken to ensure that those in prisons, psychiatric and general hospitals and other institutions are made aware of their right to register under the Immigration Act 1981, and of the need to do so before December.

Mr. Renton: A circular instruction has been sent to governors of all prison service establishments with supplies of the free information leaflet "Your Right to British Citizenship", and posters to display to draw the attention of all inmates to the leaflet. An article about the ending this year of certain rights to register as a British citizen has appeared in the October issue of the NHS "Management Bulletin".

Disabled People (Elections)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to take action on matters raised in the report of the Spastics Society, "Disabled People and the 1987 General Election", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcome the Spastics Society's report, which we have studied with interest. The Representation of the People Act 1985 introduced a statutory requirement on local authorities, so far as is reasonable and practicable, to designate as polling places only those premises which are accessible to disabled electors. The Act also enabled physically incapacitated electors to vote by proxy, as an alternative to voting by post for an indefinite period. We are reviewing the law, procedures and forms relating to absent voting and we shall consider most carefully any proposals we receive for changes in electoral law as it affects disabled people.

USA (Visas)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why no reciprocal arrangements exist with the United States of America on the necessity for United Kingdom citizens to obtain a visa before entering that country; and what is his policy towards the establishment of such arrangements.

Mr. Renton: Because such arrangements are made only when both Governments conclude that the removal of visa controls is compatible with their immigration control policies.

George Blake

Mr. Allason asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on his inquiries into CND's role in the escape of George Blake from Wormwood Scrubs.

Mr. Hurd: I understand that the Commissioner has instigated an investigation into recent allegations concerning the escape of George Blake. This investigation is now proceeding.

Prison Ships

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy to refrain from making further use of prison ships since the lease on the Earl William has expired; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to extend the leasing arrangement on the Earl William prison ship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The contract for the lease of the Earl William was for an initial period of three months, with the option of renewal for three further periods of three months. The first option of renewal was exercised and expires on 1 December. There are now no detainees on the ship. Its possible further use as an immigration detention centre is under review.

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what degree of supervision his Department exercises over the Securicor guards employed on the Earl William; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the qualifications and training of the Securicor guards employed on board the Earl William; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Care of persons detained on the Earl William rested under contract with Securicor. The company is very experienced in this field, having held the immigration detention contract since 1970. Orderlies were supervised by experienced shift leaders and chief immigration officers make frequent visits to the ship. Detailed operating instructions were issued by Securicor to its staff following close discussion with the immigration service and reflected the need for a high standard of care in every respect. Each recruit underwent five days' induction training on the job and a half day course from the immigration service.

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether lay visitors have access to the Earl William prison ship on the same basis as that which they enjoy in Her Majesty's prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: There are no formal arrangements for visits by lay visitors, but access to immigration detention centres, including the Earl William, is freely afforded, not only to relatives, friends and representatives of detainees but also to representatives of a wide variety of welfare, religious, cultural and political interests, including Members of both Houses. In the case of the Earl William, the vicar of Harwich, the Salvation Army and the Olive Tree Fellowship had unrestricted access.

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons has access to the Earl William prison ship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: In accordance with the Government reply to the sixth report from the Home Affairs Committee Session 1984-85 HC 277 (Cmnd. 9632) immigration detention centres, including the Earl William, are open to inspection by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons.

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether instructions in case of fire are available on board the Earl William in the main languages spoken by the detainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Fire drills were held regularly on the Earl William, under the direction and advice of the Essex fire and rescue service. Internationally approved pictorial fire evacuation signs were prominently posted and a fire evacuation notice in nine languages was posted in each cabin.

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there are interpretation facilities available aboard the Earl William; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: There were no resident interpreters on the Earl William, but interpreters were provided when necessary.

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total cost of holding detainees on the Earl William prison ship; and what is the average cost per detainee.

Mr. Renton: The total direct costs of operating the Earl William as an immigration detention centre for the period 15 May to the end of September were of the order of £650,000. The direct average cost per detainee during that period was about £65 a night. It is not yet clear how far these costs will be borne by the carriers.

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements were made for those detained on board MV Earl William after the ship was reberthed following the storm on 15-16 October.

Mr. Hurd: The Earl William broke loose from her moorings during the early hours of 16 October and drifted some 200-300 yds away from the berth before running aground on a sandbank. The vessel was slightly holed but nobody on board was injured. Advice from the senior harbour master was that no attempt should be made to evacuate the ship until she had been reberthed. At the time there were 78 detainees on board, of whom 72 had sought asylum in the United Kingdom. A contact telephone number at Heathrow was provided for relatives and friends wishing to make inquiries about detainees. The vessel was berthed at Parkeston quay at high tide at 20.00 hours on 16 October.

In all the circumstances, I concluded on compassionate grounds that it would no longer be right to continue to detain those concerned on board the Earl William. As there was no other detention accommodation immediately available, 70 of the 78 detainees were granted temporary admission on 16 October until their cases are determined. I am grateful to the British Refugee Council and organisations representing those detained for their co-operation in finding suitable accommodation. Of the other detainees, one has been granted leave to enter, six have been removed from the United Kingdom and one other is detained in Harmondsworth awaiting removal. The future use of the Earl William as a detention centre is under review.

Firearms

Mr. A. Cecil Walker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of acquiring and renewing a firearms certificate on the mainland of Great Britain; and how that compares with the figure for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In Great Britain both the grant and renewal of a firearms certificate costs £33. In Northern Ireland the grant of a firearms certificate costs £33 and £21 on renewal.

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is in a position to introduce proposals for new firearms legislation.

Mr. Hurd: The broad package of proposals which I announced at Torquay and other related proposals designed to strengthen existing controls on firearms are being carefully and throughly examined, in consultation with interested parties. I have arranged for a copy of that statement to be placed in the Library. The tragedy at Hungerford and other recent disturbing incidents involving those in the lawful possession of a firearm or shotgun certificate add to the case for a substantial shift in the balance of firearms law to meet the needs of public safety. This cannot be done unreasonably at the expense of the legitimate shooting interest. A proper balance must be struck between the two. I hope to announce comprehensive proposals designed to meet this end next month with a view to introducing separate new firearms legislation early this Session.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) women and (b) men employed within each grade in his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1987, c. 338]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The following table gives the number of non-industrial staff in post (full-time equivalents) by sex from January 1979 to January 1987 by grade level equivalents based on a comparison of salary scales. Comparable figures for industrial staff are not available. The figures have been derived from personnel records and may differ from other published manpower totals.

THE ARTS

Leicestershire Museums

Mr. Vaz asked the Minister for the Arts what steps have been taken to ensure that the reduced level of grant to East Midlands Museums Services will continue to allow Leicestershire museums to cater for their public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The allocation of grants to the English area museum councils is a matter for the Museums and Galleries Commission. I understand that the commission's grant to the East Midlands area museum service was increased by 11·7 per cent. in 1986-87 and by a further 4·5 per cent. in 1987-88.

Arts Council

Ms. Richardson asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will (a) list the members of the Arts Council executive, (b) state the criteria for selection of members, (c) list the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) indicate the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places, and (e) indicate how many Trades Union Congress-nominated places are held by women.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is as follows.

(a) the members of the Arts Council are:

Sir William Rees Mogg (Chairman)
James Cooke
Michael Clarke
John Cornwell
Ronald Grierson
Robin Guthrie
Pamela, The Lady Harlech
Denys Hodson, CBE
Gavin Jantjes
Philip Jones, CBE
James Logan
Clare Mulholland
Colin Nears
Sir Alan Peacock, DSC, FBA
Mathew Prichard
Sir Brian Rix, CBE
Sir Roy Strong
Elizabeth Thomas
Dr Robert Woof
Sir Brian Young

(b) and (c): Members are appointed by the Minister, who takes into account the need for a balance of experience and regional representation, including knowledge of specialist art forms, a wide interest in the arts, and commitment to the council's aims and objectives.

(d) and (e): Representation is not by group or sectional interest. There are no Trades Union Congress-nominated places.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Cartwright asked the Minister for the Arts what advice he has given to public library authorities, in discharge of his duty under section 1 of the Public Library and Museums Act 1964, on the lending of copies of Mr. Peter Wright's book "Spycatcher".

Mr. Luce: I have suggested that public library authorities should await the outcome of Derbyshire county council's application to the High Court for a variation of the court injunction preventing certain newspapers from printing extracts from the book so as to allow its library service to stock the book. The council's application was refused in the High Court last week.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Corporation Tax

Mr. Holland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the corporation tax paid as (a) a percentage of the normal rate of corporation tax and (b) in absolute terms at current prices by the aggregate of (i) the top hundred manufacturing and commercial companies, (ii) other such companies and (iii) all companies for each available year since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Amounts of corporation tax paid by all companies and public corporations are published in table 3.13 of "Financial Statistics". The further detail requested could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Excise Duties

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the rates of duty proposed by the European Economic Commission for alcoholic beverages and tobacco compare with the rates of duty charged in the United Kingdom; and what is his estimate of the effect on consumption of reducing the United Kingdom rates to the rates proposed by the Commission.

Mr. Brooke: The European Commission's proposals for "approximation" of rates of excise duty on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products, would require reductions in existing United Kingdom duty rates as shown below as follows:

Product	Commission proposal	Existing United Kingdom duty rate	Approximate percentage rate charges
Spirits	12.71 ECU (£8·91) per litre of alcohol	£15·77 per litre of alcohol	−44
Beer	1·32 ECU (£0·92) per hectolitre/degree Plato of finished product at 15°c (8·89 for average beer)	£25·80 per hectolitre plus 86p for every degree of original gravity over 1030° (31.82 for average beer)	−72
Table wine	17 ECU (£11·92) per hectolitre	£98·00 per hectolitre	−88
Fortified wine
15-18 per cent. volume	85 ECU (£59·42) per hectolitre	£169·00 per hectolitre	−65
18-22 per cent. volume	85 ECU (£59·42) per hectolitre	£194·90 per hectolitre	−70
Cigarettes	19·5 ECU (£13·70) per 1000 plus 52-54 per cent. of retail selling price	£30·61 per 1000 plus 21 per cent. of retail selling price	−10
Pipe tobacco	Excise duty + VAT to comprise 54-56 per cent. of retail selling price	£24·95 per kilogram	−17
Cigars	Excise duty + VAT to comprise 34-36 per cent. of retail selling price	£47·05 per kilogram	−52
Hand-rolling tobacco	Excise duty + VAT to comprise 54-56 per cent. of retail selling price	£49·64 per kilogram	−55

Note: 1ECU = £0·701159.

Because of the very large changes in duty levels involved, estimates of the effect on consumption are subject to wide margins of error. Applying the assumptions normally used to calculate the effect of small changes in duty rates suggests that consumption of spirits and wines could rise by as much as a third; beer by about 10 per cent; cigarettes and pipe tobacco by about 5 per cent; and cigars and hand-rolling tobacco by about a quarter.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect on consumption of the standstill on the excise duties on alcoholic beverages and tobacco in recent Budgets; what is the current value in cash terms of the 1978 rates of duty; and what is his estimate of the increase in revenue which would accrue from such rates in a full year.

Mr. Brooke: It is not possible to distinguish between changes in consumption which may have resulted from the standstill on excise duties in recent Budgets and changes which occurred as a result of other factors. However, an indication of the effect on consumption of the duty standstill can be provided by estimating what would happen to consumption in 1987 if the duties were restored to their real value at the time of the last duty change. (For example, beer duty was last increased in 1985. Revalorisation since then would require an increase in the duty of 9·6 per cent. If beer duty were increased by 9·6 per cent. in 1987, it is estimated that consumption would fall by about 1 per cent., all other things being equal). The estimates are shown in table 1.

The current value of the 1978 rates of duty and the estimated changes in revenue which would accrue if these duty rates were applied in 1987 are shown in table 2.

Personal Allowances

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table comparing information available to him on the allowances and reliefs given to single persons and one and two-earner married couples in Germany with those given in the United Kingdom, together with the width of the income band at each rate of income tax chargeable.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will recalculate the figures given in the answer to the hon. Member for Kensington on 23 March 1987, Official Report, column 35, about personal allowances on the basis of the existing income tax rate of 27 per cent., and assuming weekly basic incomes of (a) £10, (b) £11 and (c) £12.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member and my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report tables showing by range of income for single persons and for one-earner and two-earner married couples, the number of tax units and the amount of tax payable in a full year at present rates of income tax compared with the amount which would be payable where (a) men and women are taxed separately with the abolition of the married man's allowance and the wife's earnings allowance, (b) all allowances and reliefs are restricted to the standard rate, (c) a reduced rate band at 21p equal in real terms to half the reduced-rate applicable in 1978-79 and (d) an increase in the standard rate to 29p.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates are given in the table. I regret that further detail could be provided only at disproportionate expense.

Small Businesses (Taxation)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from small businesses about his taxation policies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend receives a number of representations on this subject from time to time.

Income Tax

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer of reducing (a) the top income tax rate payable to 50 per cent. and (b) the basic rate of tax by 1 penny in the pound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue costs, in a full year, at 1987-88 levels of income, of reducing the top rate of income tax to 50 per cent. and of reducing the basic rate of income tax by 1 penny in the pound would be about £450 million and £1·3 billion respectively. These estimates do not allow for any possible behavioural effects.

British Petroleum

Mr. Spearing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the limits he is setting in the proportion of the different categories of British Petroleum shares of £6·5 billion and £1·5 billion, respectively, that can be made available to (a) citizens in the United Kingdom, (b) domestic financial institutions and (c) foreign citizens or financial institutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Details of the combined BP share offer are set out in the prospectus, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. The offer has been fully underwritten.

The combined offer comprises:

(a) a fixed price offer, at an offer price of 330p per share payable in instalments, consisting of an initial allocation of 1,094 million ordinary shares for the general public and existing shareholders (except Her Majesty Treasury in the United Kingdom and certain overseas countries and separate offers to existing shareholders in the United States, Canada and Japan; and

(b) an international offer to United Kingdom institutional and overseas investors, at a price not less than the offer price (330p) also payable in inistalments, consisting of an intial allocation of 1,100 million ordinary shares.

National Economic Development Council

Ms. Richardson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will list (a) the members of the National Economic Development Council, (b) the criteria for selection of members, (c) the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places and (e) how many Trades Union Congress-nominated places are held by women.

Mr. Lawson: Apart from myself, the current members of the National Economic Development Council are:

There are no specific qualifications for NEDC membership. I appoint members because they are likely to make valuable contributions to the council's discussions of industrial and economic matters, taking into account the views of the CBI and TUC.

Six of the present NEDC members were nominated by the TUC. None of these are women.

Taxation Statistics

Mr. John Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to how the top rate of tax in the United Kingdom compares with that in the other European Community countries, Japan and the United States of America.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested is given in the table, which is supplemented by notes.

EC countries	Top rate of income tax' Per cent.
Belgium	72
Denmark	40
France	58
Germany	56
Greece	63
Ireland	58
Italy	62
Luxembourg	56
Netherlands	72
Portugal	60
Spain	66
United Kingdom	60
Others
Japan	60
United States of America	38·5

Notes:

1. The rates shown are the latest enacted. For Belgium, France, Greece and Italy they relate to the income tax year 1986; for Denmark, Germany, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Japan and the United States of America to the income tax year 1987; and for the United Kingdom and Ireland to the income tax year 1987-88.

2. In Japan the top rate for employment income is 57 per cent. only.

3. The rates given in the table are central Government income tax rates. Local income taxes are levied on income of all types in Belgium, Denmark, Japan and the United States of America. Inclusion of local income taxes would increase the top rate significantly in Denmark, to 68 per cent., and in Japan, to 76 per cent. (employment income 77 per cent.), taking the maximum local income taxes rate in Denmark, and the usual rates in Japan.

4. In Portugal top rates vary with the type of income, and the taxpayer's marital status. The rate given is for a married man who has earned income only.

Management and Computer Consultancy

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated expenditure in the current year on management and computer consultancy by (a) the Inland Revenue, (b) Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and (c) the Department of National Savings.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated expenditure of all Government Departments in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Revenue Costs

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list for each tax and excise duty the estimated cost of collection as a proportion of the total revenue collected; and if he will make a statement showing how this information is used as a management tool by the Inland Revenue, and Her Majesty's Government's Customs and Excise;

(2) if the cost of collection of any tax or duty forms part of the management reporting systems of the Inland Revenue and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cost yield ratios for 1985-86 were as follows:

	per cent.
Inland Revenue
Income tax
—employment income	1·60
—other income	5·19
Corporation tax	0·58
Capital gains tax	1·70
Capital transfer tax and estate duty	2·32
Stamp duties	0·59
Petroleum revenue tax/supplementary petroleum duty	0·018
Customs and Excise
VAT	1·04
Car tax	0·22
Hydrocarbon oil	0·13
Alcoholic drink	0·69
Tobacco products	0·08
Betting and gaming	0·87
Matches/mechanical lighters	1·12
Customs duties and associated work[1]	11·61

[1] Customs duties are not normally classified as taxes or excise duties but they are included here for completeness. The cost of their collection includes a substantial amount for non-revenue-raising work such as the prevention of drug smuggling and the enforcement of other prohibitions and restrictions.

Movements in the cost yield ratios of individual taxes and duties are monitored closely and are published in the annual public expenditure White Paper and in the report of the Board of Inland Revenue and the report of the Board of Customs and Excise. Cost yield ratios are only one of a number of factors that are taken into account by management both in advising Ministers about tax policy and in assessing administrative efficiency.

Britannia Coins

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any steps have been taken to ensure that no South African gold is used in the new Britannia coins.

Mr. Lawson: The Royal Mint will not use South African Rand refinery bar for the production of Britannia coins.

Child Benefit

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish figures showing for families with one to four children the income break-even levels, in pounds sterling per week and as percentages of average male manual earnings, at which child benefit entitlement is the same as income tax liability;

(2) if he will estimate how many and what proportion of families with children receive more in child benefit than they pay out in income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Birds (Scare Guns)

Mr. Yeo asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the use of crop guns to scare birds.

Mr. Donald Thompson: During 1987 my Department has received several approaches from campaigners connected with the Birdscarers Anti Nuisance Group and has been sent 36 letters from members of the public about bird scaring, which supported tighter control, or a ban, on the use of audible bird scarers.

The National Farmers Union has written about its code of practice on the use of such devices. A United Kingdom manufacturer has written drawing attention to the scope for controlling his firm's audible devices and disputing the need for a ban to prevent nuisance.

Horses

Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to ensure the segregation of mares, geldings and stallions whilst they are in transit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Transit of Animals (Road and Rail) Order 1975 requires mares with foals at foot and stallions to be penned separately whilst in transit. The responsibilty for enforcement rests with local authorities.

Sea Defences

Mr. David Porter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will clarify the new arrangements for local authorities funding of non emergency sea defence work; if he will make a statement about sea defences; and if he will make it his policy to treat sea defence as a national responsibility, rather than a coastal authority matter.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Food Additives

Mr. Lawrence asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to introduce stricter controls on the use of colour additives in food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Following the publication of the Food Advisory Committee report on colouring matter in foods on 30 March, I circulated for comment proposals to implement three of the report's recommendations, namely those banning the use of colours in baby foods, removing yellow 2G from the permitted list, and preventing the use of methyl violet for marking citrus fruits. I expect to be laying those regulations before Parliament shortly.

I shall also be issuing a further statement as soon as representations on the remaining recommendations in the report have been fully considered.

National Food Survey Committee

Ms. Richardson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list (a) the members of the National Food Survey Committee, (b) the criteria for selection of members, (c) the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places and (e) how many Trades Union Congress-nominated places are held by women.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The answers to the questions are given below.

(a) and (c) The present membership of the committee and their relevant qualifications are as follows:

(b) The Committee includes officials responsible for administering the survey and other members are selected to reflect particular expertise necessary to ensure that the survey is run efficiently. For instance, advice on survey methods is sought from statisticians, on nutritional aspects from within the food science profession and on econometric analysis from University economists.

(e) none

Sheep (Sale Restrictions)

Mr. Rooker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many lambs and sheep are under restriction for sale in England as a result of nuclear accidents in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None.

Sugar

Mr. Spearing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to the reply of 24 July, Official Report, column 615, he will state the receipts from the sugar elimination levy from each relevant member of the European Community since its introduction.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is as follows (million ECU):

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Miss Emma Nicholson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting held in Luxembourg on 19-20 October 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Council considered further the Commission's proposals for the important and necessary changes in the support arrangements — the so-called "stabilisers"—to bring costs under much better control. After a discussion on general principles at the September Council, this Council meeting began the task of considering the proposals for individual commodities in specific terms. I made clear that, for the stabilisers to be effective, it was essential to take decisions on details and not just on framework mechanisms in advance of the December meeting of the European Council, and I emphasised to my agricultural colleagues the urgency of their reaching agreement on this.

The Council had a first debate on related Commission proposals for income aids to mitigate the effect of stricter price policy for farmers with relatively low incomes. Most member states, including ourselves, had substantial reservations on the present proposals.

Finally, the Council achieved a reconciliation with the European Parliament on the details of a regulation which will change the system whereby the Commission reimburses member states for EAGGF expenditure, from monthly advances to payments in arrears. This change will strengthen control over Community expenditure and help to contain 1987 expenditure within the budget provision.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Alcohol Consumption

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what effect the increase in the consumption of alcoholic beverages since 1960 has had on accidents and on the demand for health care; and what further increase is expected in the next 10 years at the present rate of consumption.

Mrs. Currie: Although alcohol is known to be a factor in accidents of all kinds, central information is available only in respect of alcohol-related road traffic accidents. The tables set out information on alcohol-related accident injuries and deaths since 1976 and 1978 respectively, the earliest years from which information in this form has been collected.

[1] Provisional.

Trends in the numbers of drink-drive accidents have been affected more by changes in legislation and police enforcement efforts than by changes in per capita alcohol consumption.

The demand for health care arising from alcohol-related accidents cannot be separately identified.

Recent research has estimated that alcohol misuse in England and Wales cost the National Health Service £112 million in 1985 in respect of in-patient treatment and GP services alone.

Government efforts are directed towards reducing accidents and other forms of alcohol-related harm. The new ministerial group on alcohol misuse will provide a single focus for developing and co-ordinating future Government strategy against alcohol misuse.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in the introduction of a cervical cytology call and recall system in Barnet.

Mrs. Currie: The cervical cytology call and recall scheme operated by Barnet family practitioner committee was brought into operation in January 1986. The scheme, which is computerised, initially covered women between the ages of 35 and 65 who were registered with a GP: it was extended in July 1987 to cover women over the age of 20.

Social Security Appeals System

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he proposes to take any new steps to speed up the social security appeals system.

Mr. Portillo: In the last quarter of 1986 the average time taken to process a social security appeal from lodgement to hearing was estimated to be 15·4 weeks. Responsibility for the administrative handling of social security appeals rests partly with DHSS and partly with the President of Social Security Appeal Tribunals and Medical Appeal Tribunals. I know that the President, his Honour Judge Byrt, shares my concern at the length of time being taken for appeals to be heard.

In 1986 a central management survey team examined the procedures for handling appeals in DHSS offices. A final report is expected later this year and its recommendations will be closely studied. Next year the Government are introducing the social fund which will have its own system of reviews and will not be subject to appeal. This should considerably reduce the volume of appeals and should lead to a reduction in average clearance times. In the longer term, the departmental operational strategy, and in particular the computerisation of the assessment of entitlement to income support, should lead to improved standards of initial decision making and hence a reduced work load for tribunals.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the number of Scottish pensioners who have lost (a) up to £1 per week, (b) between £1 and £4 per week and (c) over £4 per week as a result of changes introduced in April;

(2) if he will estimate the average loss to pensioners in Scotland of housing benefit changes introduced in April;

(3) if he will estimate the number of pensioners in Scotland who have lost housing benefit completely as a result of the changes introduced in April;

(4) what is the number of pensioners and percentage of pensioners who have lost (a) some housing benefit and (b) all housing benefit, breaking the figures down between local authority tenants and private tenants, in Scotland, as a result of the April changes.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that breakdowns of estimates of the effects of the changes to the housing benefit scheme in April 1987 are not available separately for Scottish households.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his most recent estimate of the numbers of retirement pensioners who will be worse off by (a) up to £1 per week, (b) between £1 and £2 per week, (c) between £2 and £3 per week, (d) between £3 and £4 per week, (e) between £4 and £5 per week, and (f) £5 per week or over when housing benefit supplement is withdrawn in April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: The information is not available on which to base an estimate. However, claims for people receiving housing benefit supplement immediately before the introduction of the reformed social security schemes will automatically be assessed for entitlement to income support as well as for reformed housing benefit.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his most recent estimate of the number of pensioners who have capital in excess of £6,000 and who receive housing benefit.

Mr. Portillo: We do not collect specific information about amounts of capital held by households who receive housing benefit. The 1984 and 1985 family expenditure surveys included questions on income from capital and it is possible to use this information to make broad estimates, although these may not be very reliable. On this basis, it is estimated that currently somewhat over one third of a million pensioners in receipt of standard housing benefit have capital over £6,000.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the transitional protection to be afforded to recipients of supplementary benefit in April 1988 will also be afforded to recipients of housing benefit supplement.

Mr. Portillo: No, transitional protection will not be afforded to recipients of housing benefit supplement—they will be treated in the same way as other claimants of standard housing benefit. However, all housing benefit supplement recipients will automatically be assessed for Income Support to ensure that those who are entitled to income support receive it without the need for a separate claim.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he proposes to alter the basis of housing benefit from household income to individual income on the introduction of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The provisions in housing benefit to assess the resources of couples jointly will continue. Non-dependant deductions, currently made in respect of a contribution by the non-dependant towards domestic rates, will not be needed when the community charge has replaced domestic rates.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the need for housing benefit to cover emergency alarm systems for elderly, infirm and disabled people living in dispersed housing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We have received representations from the local authority associations and from organisations representing the elderly on the eligibility for housing benefit of the costs of charges for emergency alarm systems. The reformed housing benefit scheme carries forward our existing policy that housing benefit covers only those costs which are directly related to accommodation requirements. In response to comments on the reformed scheme, the final draft regulations recently issued to the local authority associations for consultation make it clear that charges for emergency alarm systems will be eligible for housing benefit where they are provided in any accommodation which is particularly suitable for elderly, sick or disabled people.

Interdepartmental Group for Under-fives

Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when last the interdepartmental group for under-fives met; and if he will make a statement about what was discussed;

(2) what future plans he has for the interdepartmental group for under fives.

Mrs. Currie: The interdepartmental consultative group on provision for under-fives met, under the Chairmanship of my hon. Friend the Minister for Health, with the Association of County Councils, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, the National Association of Health Authorities, and representatives of the voluntary sector on 12 October. The matters discussed were the White Paper on the Law on Child Care and Family Services, co-ordination of services for under fives, training, the involvement of the Manpower Services Commission with services for under fives and the Under Fives Initiative. It was agreed that the group would meet with the same bodies before Easter. We intend that there shall in future be annual meetings of the group.

Tardive Dyskinesia

Mr. Vaz asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken, in the light of research asserting a link between the phenothiazines, a class of major tranquillisers, and tardive dyskinesia in some recipients, to monitor the incidence of this complaint; and what steps are being taken to limit the use of these drugs by the psychiatric profession, and their promotion by drug companies.

Mrs. Currie: Research, which has clearly shown the value of phenothiazines in the treatment of certain serious psychiatric illnesses, has also shown that a proportion of patients taking them may suffer symptoms of tardive dyskinesia. The Committee on Safety of Medicines monitors all suspected adverse drug reactions through reports from doctors. Its publication "Current Problems Number 4" in April 1979 specifically covered tardive dyskinesia, and advised doctors treating psychiatric patients to give careful consideration to the risk-benefit ratio.

A number of studies have been published from which psychiatrists and other doctors can assess the degree of risk in different circumstances. The Licensing authority, with advice from the Committee, ensures that data sheets (sent by the manufacturer to all doctors) give appropriate information about adverse reactions and that advertisements are consistent with data sheets.

Electro-convulsive Therapy

Mr. Vaz asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what research has been conducted or commissioned into the efficacy of electro-convulsive therapy for psychiatric conditions; what information he has as to the incidence of its use and its receptance as a valid method of treatment by the medical profession; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: There has been a considerable volume of research recently both regarding the efficacy of electro-convulsive therapy (ECT) for different patient groups and regarding the method of treatment. This research has confirmed that ECT is a very effective treatment for certain clinical conditions, and has made it clearer which conditions are best treated with ECT; it also confirmed that when properly administered its side effects are very slight.

The number of courses of treatment has tended to fall gradually in recent years. ECT is widely accepted as an effective treatment within the medical profession; the falling number of people being treated with ECT is likely to reflect the greater knowledge now available about the types of conditions most suitably treated with ECT and the availability of other treatments.

Royal Northern Hospital (Islington)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representation he has received concerning the future of the Royal Northern hospital, Islington district health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: None.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current number of supplementary benefit claimants in (a) Finsbury Park and (b) Highgate offices of his Department; and what were the relevant figures for the three previous years.

Mr. Portillo: The number of people in receipt of supplementary benefit from the Finsbury Park and Highgate Local Offices, on 28 July 1987 (the latest date for which information is available) and for the years 1984 to 1986, are:

	Finsbury Park	Highgate
28 July 1987	21,303	18,844
13 August 1986	20,180	19,037

31 July 1984	17,507	17,072

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment has been made of the financial losses sustained by lone parents who are currently affected by the requirement in the supplementary benefit regulations that they must register as available for work once their children reach the age of 16 years.

Mr. Portillo: A lone parent who has been in receipt of the long term rate of supplementary benefit and who becomes required to be available for employment when she no longer has a dependant child under 16 will move to the short term rate with a weekly loss of £8·25 if a householder, £6·60 if a non-householder or £1·15 if, unusually, a boarder. Under the proposed income support scheme there will be no distinctions between long and short term rates, or between householders and non-householders. The family and the lone parent premiums will continue to be payable so long as a child or young person is a member of the family whether or not the lone parent is required to be available for work.

Administration and Medical Secretaries

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what restrictions are placed on the part or full-time employment of qualified administration or medical secretaries on grounds of age.

Mr. Newton: None, beyond retirement age policies which are determined locally by employing health authorities and the law governing the employment of young people.

Invalid Care Allowance

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many married women who applied for the invalid care allowance following his announcement in June 1986 are still waiting for the benefit; what percentage that figure represents of the total number of applicants; how many of those applied before the original closing date of 31 December 1986; and when he estimates that all the applicants will have received the benefit.

Mr. Scott: At 9 October some 130,600 invalid care allowance claims had been received from married women of which about 18,700 (14.3 per cent.) were awaiting decision. These claims, including around 8,000 received up to 31 December 1986, will be cleared as quickly as possible. The question inadvertently implies a final date for claims; although claims received after 31 August 1987 do not attract extra-statutory arrears in excess of 12 months, the statutory entitlement to current benefit and up to 12 months arrears in appropriate circumstances, will continue indefinitely.

Telephone Exchange for the Deaf

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he proposes to have further discussions with representatives of British Telecom and the Royal National Institute for the Deaf on the future of funding and extension of the telephone exchange for the deaf (TED); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I understand that there has been a meeting between British Telecom and the Royal National Institute for the Deaf about the future of the RNID telephone exchange for the deaf. Discussions are now proceeding urgently between British Telecom and the Government Departments concerned.

Benefits

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the staff on his Department are engaged in publicising the existence of welfare benefits to potential beneficiaries; what percentage of his staff this represents; what is the cost of this service; and what proportion of the expenditure of his Department this represents.

Mr. Portillo: Advising potential beneficiaries of the existence of welfare benefits forms a part of the work of all staff in the local office network. Information on the proportion of staff time spent in this way is not collected centrally. It is not therefore possible to provide the cost of this service. The Department's planned expenditure on promotional literature and advertising of Social Security benefits in the 1987-88 financial year is £11 million.

AIDS

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures for the number of (a) cases of and (b) deaths from AIDS.

Mr. Newton: The Department announced on 5 October that a United Kingdom total of 1,067 cases of AIDS, including 605 deaths, had been reported to the communicable diseases surveillance centre and the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit by the end of September.

Maternity Payments

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will be sending a leaflet about the new maternity payments to family income supplement claimants who have notified the Department that a child has been born; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I have given today to her other question about maternity payments in which I have outlined the measures which we have taken to inform family income supplement recipients about social fund maternity payments.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how he intends to inform people who claim family income supplement that they are now entitled to claim the new maternity payment.

Mr. Portillo: The new arrangements for making maternity payments under the social fund were introduced on 6 April 1987. A leaflet setting out the various social security benefits available to expectant and new mothers and a related poster are available for display in all DHSS local offices, main Post Offices and ante-natal clinics. The leaflet is also available through family practitioners. Copies of an integrated leaflet and application form used for claiming the social fund maternity payment are available in DHSS local offices and ante-natal clinics. Additionally both the family income supplement leaflet and the related letter which is sent to notify claimants of the amount of benefit awarded draw attention to the fact that help from the social fund may be available. Similar arrangements will be made in the leaflets relating to the new family credit scheme commencing in April 1988 and in the information sent to successful claimants.

Funeral Payments

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services where the leaflets and application forms for the new funeral payments will be displayed.

Mr. Portillo: The new arrangements for payment for funeral expenses under the social fund were introduced on 6 April 1987. Copies of an integrated leaflet and application form are available in DHSS local offices and offices of Registrars of Births, Marriages and Deaths. A leaflet which draws attention to social fund funeral payments and other social security benefits which are available, in appropriate circumstances, to bereaved people, is displayed in DHSS local offices and main Post Offices.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how he intends to inform housing benefit and family income supplement claimants that they can now claim the new funeral payments.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I have given today to her other question about funeral payments. Additionally, the family income supplement leaflet and the letter which is sent to notify the amount of benefit awarded draw attention to the fact that help from the social fund may be available. Leaflets for the reformed housing benefit and the new family credit schemes will carry a similar message from next April.

Funeral and Maternity Payments

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has made any provision for extra staff in his Department's local supplementary benefit offices to administer the new funeral and maternity payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: A total of 224 staff have been allocated to local social security offices this year for the administration of funeral and maternity payments.

Hospitals (Birmingham)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make extra resources available to hospitals in Birmingham to update kitchens as a result of the loss of Crown immunity.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans to do so. Central guidance has, for a number of years, indicated that health authorities are expected to establish working practices as if they were not immune from legal penalty. Last July the chairman of West Midlands regional health authority announced that an additional £3 million was being spent on hospital kitchens in Birmingham following discussions with the city's environmental health officers on hygiene issues.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospitals in Birmingham have lost training status in the past one, two, and three years; and in each case for what reasons.

Mrs. Currie: The Department does not collect routinely detailed information about training recognition. The hon. Member may, therefore, wish to approach the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many beds and wards are currently closed in Birmingham hospitals; and how this compares with the situation one, five and 10 years ago;

(2) how many health authorities in Birmingham have discontinued a home laundry service;

(3) in which Birmingham hospitals the asbestos removal programme has been abandoned; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what is his best estimate of the numbers of patients of Birmingham hospitals with treatable conditions who have become incurable in the past 12 months.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may therefore wish to write to the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority who may be able to help him.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the new policy initiatives from his Department in the past two years insofar as they affect hospitals in Birmingham; and if he will give details of the extra resources made available to carry out each initiative.

Mrs. Currie: In general, the Department does not allocate funds for specific purposes. It is for each health authority to determine how the funds available to it should be spent bearing in mind the Government's policy aims and objectives.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on current policy regarding transfers of patients from Rampton hospital to St. Margaret's hospital, Great Barr, Birmingham.

Mrs. Currie: There is no specific policy with regard to the transfer of Rampton hospital patients to St. Margaret's hospital, Great Barr, Birmingham.

Once it is considered that a patient no longer needs treatment in conditions of special security, the possibility of transfer from special hospital to another hospital or, if appropriate, discharge into the community is explored by the patient's responsible medical officer. Transfer to a National Health Service hospital must first be agreed between the patient's responsible medical officer and the appropriate NHS consultant. Where the transfer of a special hospital patient proves to be difficult there are arrangements for this Department to take up the case with the appropriate regional health authority. Permanent transfer is often preceded by a period of trial leave. In the case of a restricted patient the prior approval of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department is required before any move outside the special hospital can take place.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy not to restrict the use of hospitals in Birmingham to residents of Birmingham.

Mrs. Currie: District general hospitals are expected to provide services for their local population as are teaching hospitals in addition to their wider responsibilities. General practitioners may however refer a patient to the consultant whom they consider will be of the greatest benefit to their patient.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the future of regional specialities of hospitals in Birmingham.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Service[illegible] representations he has received about the curre[illegible]unding of hospitals in Birmingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have received a number of letters from hon. Members and members of the public about the funding of health services in Birmingham. Since 1979 the number of inpatients treated in Birmingham has increased by 12 per cent. and the number of patients waiting for treatment has fallen by 22 per cent. By any measure this is a success story made possible by increased resources and the dedication of the staff. Having discussed the current situation in Birmingham with the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority, I am confident that the best possible service will continue to be provided to patients within the available resources.

As the hon. Member is aware however, financial allocations to districts are a matter for the regional health authority.

Orthopaedic Surgery (Birmingham)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has for shortening waiting lists for orthopaedic surgery in Birmingham.

Mrs. Currie: The five Birmingham health districts are between them receiving £828,000 from the waiting list fund which will enable their hospitals to carry out 1,500-2,000 extra orthopaedic operations and take over 400 additional out-patient cases from the waiting list in 1987-88. The precise number of procedures performed will depend on case-mix. The projects being supported include the provision of an additional operating theatre at the Royal Orthopaedic hospital (Woodlands) which will have a continuing impact on the number of patients treated. In addition the Bromsgrove and Redditch District Health Authority is receiving £120,000 to treat 150 orthopaedic in-patients from the South Birmingham waiting lists, the people living within the East Birmingham District will benefit from a project to carry out over 130 extra orthopaedic operations for £75,000 in the Solihull DHA.

Birmingham Health Authorities

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out figures for revenue spending for the Birmingham health authorities in 1982-83 at 1985-86 values together with the figure for 1985-86; and what account these figures take of demographic changes in addition to inflation.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mortality Statistics

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many men aged 65 years and over, and women aged 60 years and over, have died in each month since July 1985.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table. The latest available data are for December 1986.

Pension Books

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on the abolition of retirement pension books in favour of bank cash cards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We have no plans for either the abolition of order books or the introduction of bank cash cards as a method of paying social security benefits.

London Boroughs (Fostering Schemes)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those London boroughs which have adult fostering schemes for people with learning difficulties.

Mrs. Currie: Comprehensive information is not available centrally. However, it is known that a number of London boroughs operate or are planning to operate "adult fostering" schemes for mentally handicapped people.

Family Credit

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information the new family credit form requires claimants to give about their current savings and capital.

Mr. Portillo: For family income supplement, claimants are required only to declare the amount of any interest they receive from savings and capital; but for family credit it is necessary to know the value of the savings and capital. In preparation for the conversion of existing family income supplement recipients to family credit from next April the form asks them to declare whether they have any savings worth more than £2,000 and if any of their children have savings worth more than £2,000, and if so to give details. It also asks whether they own any property or land.

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why, in the light of the current savings and capital limit of £3,000 for supplementary benefit, he has decided to ask family income supplement claimants to declare savings below the present capital limit when completing the family credit claim form.

Mr. Portillo: Information about savings and capital is being sought on the same basis as on supplementary benefit claim forms. Claimants are asked to provide details where savings are above £2,000. This is appropriate since some assets have to be valued at more than the nominal amount (for example shares or National Savings Certificates).

Income Support

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will amend the draft income support regulations so as to exempt lone parents from the requirement to register as available for full-time work while they are in receipt of a dependant allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The present policy of exempting a lone parent only while there is a dependant child under 16 has applied since 1948 and it recognises that a parent in this position is no longer prevented from seeking work by the need to care for a young child and that it is generally in the person's own interests to seek work when in this situation. The requirement does not, of course, apply if the person is in one of the other exempted groups which are listed in Schedule 1 of the draft Income Support (General) Regulations — for example because she is over 50, has not worked for 10 years, has not been required to be available for work during that period and has no prospect of future employment.

Kidney Stones (Treatment)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why there are no shock wave machines for the treatment of patients with kidney stones in the west midlands region.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Kidney Patients (Birmingham)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many kidney patients with a treatable condition have been rejected by National Health Service hospitals in Birmingham in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally. The Government are fully committed to the expansion of services for patients with end stage renal failure. In 1986 the West Midlands regional health authority reached the required national target for accepting new patients on to its renal programme and is investing additional resources of some £640,000 this year in support of its programme.

Child Raising (Costs)

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what deduction can be drawn from the family expenditure survey as to the proportion of the average costs of raising one child, taking medium income in 1985 for a couple with one child as the reference point, which is covered by child benefit at the current rate.

Mr. Portillo: Relevant information could not be extracted from the Family Expenditure Survey without disproportionate expense. But in any event, child benefit helps towards the extra costs faced by families with children, and is not intended to meet those costs in full nor to bear a specific relationship to the costs individual families may incur.

Family Taxation

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures showing for 1975, 1980 and 1985 the numbers of lower paid single people with and without children, and of lower paid families with and without children, whose marginal tax rates including benefit withdrawal were (a) over 100 per cent. (b) 90-100 per cent., (c) 80-90 per cent., (d) 70-80 per cent., (e) 60-70 per cent., (f) 50-60 per cent., and (g) 40-50 per cent; and if he will compare these figures with the numbers likely to be similarly affected after implementation of the Social Security Act 1986 in April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: Information for 1975 and 1980 is not readily available and results for April 1988 will depend on rates of benefit, income tax and national insurance which have yet to be announced. The available information for November 1985, which cannot readily be disaggregated into single people and married couples, is as follows:

Working families with children

Marginal tax rate (per cent.)	Numbers (000)
Over 50 below 60	140
Over 60 below 70	100
Over 70 below 80	—
Over 80 below 90	110
Over 90 below 100	60
100 and over	70
Total over 50 per cent.	480

Working families without children

Marginal tax rate (per cent.)	Numbers (000)
Over 50 below 60	90
Over 60 below 70	60
Over 70 below 80	—
Over 80 below 90	50
Over 90 below 100	—
100 and over	—
Total 50 per cent. and over	200

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether two separate systems of rebates will be required during the phasing in of community charge; one system for domestic rates and one for community charge.

Mr. Portillo: Phasing in of community charge will only occur in England. During the transitional period in England, rebates will be available both for domestic rates and for the community charge. The operational details of the rebate scheme are still being considered in consultation with local authorities.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether there will be facilities for community charge rebates to be paid daily to those liable for collective community charge and eligible for community charge rebates.

Mr. Portillo: The operational details of the community charge rebate scheme are still being considered in consultation with local authorities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Shoe Industry

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what financial support has been give to the British shoe industry through the British Overseas Trade Board since 1974-75, both in absolute and real terms, including the budget for the current financial year.

Mr. Alan Clark: The BOTB does not allocate funds or generally keep records of financial assistance to industry sectors. However, some information on overseas trade fairs sponsored by BFMF (British Footwear Manufactures Federation) and SATRA Footwear Technology Centre is available as follows:

Year	Support £	At 1987-8 prices £
1983-84	46,688	55,643
1984-85	25,929	29,599
1985-86	79,629	85,723
1986-87	33,490	34,997

This year support for trade fairs is estimated at £17,798.

EC (Steel Industry)

Mr. Win Griffiths asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, since March 1987, when and where talks have taken place between Government and Commission officials on the issue of European Economic Community steel industry production capacity and job cuts; and what views were put forward by each side at these meetings.

Mr. Atkins: Three Councils of Ministers — on 19 March, 1 June and 21 September—have considered the future of the European steel regime. In preparation for these there have been a number of bilateral and multilateral meetings involving United Kingdom Ministers and officials and the Commission and frequent contacts between the United Kingdom permanent representation in Brussels and the Commission. Following unanimous agreement at the most recent Council of Ministers on the need for restrictions to ensure the future viability of the Community steel industry the Commission has appointed "Three Wise Men" to advise on how adequate commitments to reduction of production capacity can be obtained.

Post Office

Mr. Favell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce legislation to privatise the Post Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No. It is the Government's view that there are significant benefits to be gained in transferring activities from the public to the private sector. Nevertheless, we have made it clear that because of its special character we have no intention of privatising the Royal Mail; but we do not rule out other parts of the Post Office as possible candidates where privatisation is practicable and makes commercial sense, though we have not yet come to any conclusions.

Film Distribution Scheme

Mr. Favell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he proposes to take on the report of the Director General of Fair Trading on the experimental film distribution scheme in Greater Manchester and Glasgow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I am considering what action might be appropriate in the light of the Director General of Fair Trading's assessment of the results of the Manchester and Glasgow film releasing experiment, and intend to consult the industry as soon as is practicable about such action.

Mr. Ben Banerjee

Mr. Dalyell asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his Department's examination of the case of Mr. Ben Banerjee in relation to the export of arms to Iran.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am not aware there has been any breach of United Kingdom Government export control regulations by Mr. Banerjee and therefore no examination is taking place.

Mail (Russia)

Mr. John Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many representations have been made to the Russian authorities during the past four years about their violations of international postal conventions.

Mr. Butcher: As I said in reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 20 July, at columns 85-86, the Post Office and my officials take every opportunity to express concern to Soviet postal authorities in international postal forums about the non-delivery of mail addressed to Soviet citizens. Since the UPU Congress in July 1984, United Kingdom delegates at international postal meetings have made such representations at least once a year. Moreover, the United Kingdom delegation to the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe review in Vienna raised this issue three times between November last year and May 1987, and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs referred to it in his speech in the same forum last December.

Individual cases concerning particular items are dealt with by the Post Office by means of standard international inquiry forms, followed, if necessary, by a letter raising a specific point.

Mr. John Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many complaints the Post Office has received in the past year about the non-delivery of mail in Russia; and in how many cases the Post Office has paid compensation to the complainants.

Mr. Butcher: This is a matter for the Post Office. However, I understand that in the year from October 1986 to September 1987 the Post Office received 1,026 inquiries about mail to the Soviet Union and paid compensation in 207 cases.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Ms. Richardson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will list (a) the members of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, (b) the criteria for selection of members, (c) the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places and (e) how many Trades Union Congress-nominated places are held by women.

Mr. Maude: Members of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission are drawn from a variety of professional backgrounds relevant to the work of the commission. In selecting candidates for appointment the particular expertise and experience currently required by the commission are important considerations. Places are reserved neither for any particular specialism nor for the nominees of particular organisations. At present four members have a background in trade union affairs; all are men.

Note:
1. Under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973 the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is responsible for maintaining a panel from which additional members may be appointed to take part in any investigation into a newspaper merger.
2. Similarly, under section 13(10) of the Telecommunications Act 1984 the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is required to appoint not less than three additional members to the commission to assist in any investigation under the Act.

Consumer Protection

Mr. Fraser asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what arrangements he has made for consulting the National Consumer Council, the Retail Consortium and others about regulations and the code of practice to be drawn up under part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987.

Mr. Maude: Informal consultations with major interested parties, including the National Consumer Council and the Retail Consortium, are taking place at present. Wider public consultation will commence as soon as informal consultations are complete.

Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for Small Businesses

Ms. Richardson asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will (a) list the members of the Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for Small Businesses, (b) state the criteria for selection of members, (c) list the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) indicate the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places and (e) indicate how many Trades Union Congress-nominated members are women.

Mr. Butcher: Members of this committee are appointed by the Director General of Telecommunications, to whom questions on its composition should be addressed. A list of the current members is as follows:

Mr. H. Kleeman, CBE (Chairman)
Mr. P. Agnew
Mr. I. Bell
Mr. R. Blaxland
Mr. R. Frenzel
Mr. P. Fryman
Mr. R. Furey
Mrs. J. Harris
Mr. F. Hawman
Mr. E. Roberts
Mr. M. Taylor
Mr. G. Thorpe
Mr. J. White

Rover Group

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to sell all or part of the Rover Group to the private sector.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The long-term aim of both the Rover Group board and the Government is to return the company to full private ownership, but we have no specific plans at present.

South Africa

Mr. John Morris asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment has been made by Her Majesty's Government of the effect on jobs of imposing full sanctions against South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: No current assessment has been made, but when an exercise was undertaken last year our best estimate was that about 90,000 full-time job equivalents may be involved in the export of goods and services to South Africa. United Kingdom jobs are also involved in trade with neighbouring southern African countries which transit South Africa and in those United Kingdom industries which depend on imports from South Africa.

Post Office Counters Ltd.

Mr. Spearing asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the future of Post Office Counters Limited.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We set long-term strategic objectives for the Post Office in July last year. The Government's policy is that Post Office Counters Ltd. should operate commercially, providing profitable cost-effective services of a quality which satisfies the reasonable requirements of its agency clients and its customers.

Fireworks

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will bring forward legislation to limit the sale of fireworks to the general public to one week prior to 5 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: No. The present voluntary arrangements under which the sale of fireworks is restricted to a three-week period around 5 November is working well. I do not consider that a shorter period would be generally welcomed.

Ship Radio Licences

Mr. Steen asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will set out in tabular form in the Official Report all the different types of ship radio licences, the cost of each and whether he intends to reduce the numbers and rationalise the fees;

(2) how many officials have been employed in each of the last three years in administering the different types of ship radio licences; what has been the cost of this in each of the last three years; and if he will review the procedures and rationalise the administration.

Mr. Butcher: The different ship radio licences and the appropriate fees collected are:

Licence	Fee
Ship Radio	50·00 pa
Ship Radio (VHF)	17·50 pa
Ship Radio (emergency only)	20·00 every 5 years
Ship Radio (transportable)	25·00 pa
Ship Radio (receive only)	No charge (valid until revoked)

The number of officials employed directly on the issue of ship radio licences and their costs for each of the last three years, were:

Year	Number of Staff Licensing	Others	Costs
			£K
1984-5	11	3·65	197
1985-6	10	3·65	226
1986-7	7	3·45	186

My Department has a commitment to review licence types, procedures and fees on a regular basis. This has resulted in a reduction, in the last few years, in the number of different licences issued and the simplification of the administrative procedures necessary to issue such licences. The procedures involved in issuing ship radio licences were revised at the end of 1986 and have resulted in a considerable reduction in the time taken to issue a licence (five to six weeks down to one to two weeks), and a doubling of the number of licences dealt with per officer over the three-year period. Despite this significant improvement my Department is currently exploring the possibilities of further reducing licensing administration, by merging licences, or exempting particular uses of radio.

Handsworth Task Force

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many jobs have been created by the Handsworth task force since it was set up; and how much of the allocated budget has been (a) spent and (b) committed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since the Government's Handsworth Task Force was set up in 1986 it has committed some £2·4 million from its own top-up funds to projects and, of this, £1·2 million has so far been spent. However their task force supported projects are also expected to lever over £4 million from private sector and other public sector sources bringing the total expenditure upon them to around £6·5 million. The task force also assists in the targeting of main Government programmes into Handsworth and since the task force was set up total Government expenditure in the area has been around £25 million.

It is not, however, possible to measure total net jobs created in the task force area with any accuracy. Any estimate would not only have to take into account new jobs specifically associated with task force projects, but also jobs in firms helped by task force development funds, jobs created in agencies funded by the inner cities initiative and jobs gained by residents as a result of training courses facilitated by the initiative. We have not, therefore attempted such an overall estimate.

ENVIRONMENT

Steel-framed Houses

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance the Building Research Establishment is able to offer on the inspection and assessment of steel-framed and steel-clad houses.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Building Research Establishment's fifth report on steel framed and steel clad houses which deals with inspection and assessment techniques, is published today. It provides detailed guidance on methods of inspection and assessment needed for a structural survey, identifies locations where steel may be vulnerable to corrosion, and gives advice on the likely durability of protective coatings. It also contains a comprehensive list of steel framed, steel clad and cast iron house types, with their known locations.

The report is based on the BRE's detailed examination of a large number of dwellings built in 24 different systems in a wide variety of locations. It confirms that the vast majority of steel houses have demonstrated levels of performance not very different from many traditionally built dwellings of the same age, and can be expected to give good performance into the foreseeable future, with a life on a par with rehabilitated dwellings of conventional construction.

I hope that this report, read in conjunction with those on individual house types which the BRE is now producing, will be of particular value to building societies and their surveyors when considering lending on properties of this type. I believe that local authorities and other owners will find the report equally helpful when approaching the repair and maintenance of these houses.

Also published today is a summary of the report as a BRE Information paper, and a Companion Information paper on repair and improvement techniques. Copies of the report and the Information papers are being sent to local authorities in England which own steel and cast iron houses, and to the professional institutions whose members have a practical interest in the subject. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales are taking similar action.

Rating Reform

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will calculate at 1987-88 prices the relationship of gross net community charge to net household income in each band of equivalent net income set out in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" at figure F5 (a) on the basis used in the Green Paper, (b) on the basis of incorporating in income support and housing benefit an additional payment of 20 per cent. of domestic rates and (c) on the basis of present social security arrangements;

(2) if he will calculate at 1987-88 prices the numbers of households gaining and losing from the replacement of domestic rates by the community charge as set out in figure 17 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (a) on the basis used in the Green Paper, (b) on the basis of incorporating in income support and housing benefit an additional payment of 20 per cent. of average domestic rates and (c) on the basis of present social security arrangements.

Mr. Howard: The figures set out in the Green Paper were derived from a tax benefit model calibrated to 1984-85 prices. The model is currently being updated to 1986-87 prices, the latest date for which appropriate income information is available. When that work is complete we shall publish updated tables corresponding to those in the Green Paper.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if foreigners will be identified on the community charge register so as to avoid their prosecution for not being on the electoral register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The community charges register and the electoral register will be separate documents. The two will not have the same coverage. The community charges register will contain the names of those adults who are solely or mainly resident in an area. Whether they are United Kingdom citizens will be immaterial. There is no question of someone who is not entitled to vote being prosecuted for not being on the electoral register.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the initial cost of the setting up the community charge collection system will be met by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Howard: The cost of setting up the community charge registration and collection system will be taken into account in rate support grant settlements.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if joint and several liability for the poll tax will extend to married couples who are separated, but living in the same dwelling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: A husband and wife who are members of the same household will be jointly liable for each other's community charge. Exceptionally, a husband and wife may have so organised their living arrangements that, though they live under the same roof, they are not members of the same household. In such circumstances it will be open to either member of the couple to make a case to the local authority that they should not be treated as jointly and severally liable for the purposes of recovery of the community charge.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the initial canvass for the poll tax register will require names, ages and relationship details of occupants of residential accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Community charge registration officers will decide what information they require when sending out the initial canvass. In order to compile the register they will need to know the name and address of each adult liable for the personal community charge, but not the reltionship of one adult with another.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his latest estimate of the total number of people who will pay the full community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) on 15 July at column 527.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of couples where one partner will pay both community charges.

Mr. Howard: It is quite impossible for me to speculate on the private financial arrangements which will be made by individual couples.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his latest estimate of the numbers of people who will be required to pay 20 per cent. of the community charge;

(2) if he will list for each local authority the number of dwellings where the rates paid are equal to the community charge per person, using the figures from the exemplifications placed in the Library since 11 June;

(3) if he will produce figure J7 of Cmnd. 9714 "Paying for Local Government", showing households gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rates by the community charge by (a) region, (b) local authority, and (c) parliamentary constituency;

(4) if he will construct a table in the same form as figure J7 on page 125 of "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) showing the numbers of adults living in each of the households gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rates by the community charge.

Mr. Howard: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give examples of the extreme cases in which individuals failing to register for the community charge may be liable to prosecution under the Theft Acts, referred to in paragraph 22 of the "Paying for Local Government" deposited paper, NS. 2643.

Mr. Howard: We have proposed a number of civil penalties under the new system. These will be applied if a person fails, without reasonable excuse, to register for the community charge or to respond to a canvass. Where a person, by deception, dishonestly avoids paying all or part of the community charge by consistently supplying false information there will also be the possibility of recourse to the existing criminal law. In this respect the community charge will be no different from any other legally enforceable liability.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether, in cases where the ownership or tenancy of a dwelling is in the wife's name, this will prevent her husband being designated the responsible person for community charge registration purposes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether, in cases where the ownership or tenancy of a dwelling is in the husband's name, this will prevent his wife being designated the responsible person for community charge registration purposes; and if he will make a statement.

(3) if the practice of married and unmarried couples alternating as head of household on electoral registration forms will be allowed on the community charge register;

(4) how the responsible person will be designated at each address for community charge registration purposes.

Mr. Howard: The responsible person at each address will be designated by the community charge registration office (CCRO) and will receive a notice of designation. This notice will be incorporated into the canvass form sent out by the CCRO.

The person designated will generally be the owner or tenant living at the address, but may be another person who has a connection with the property or who wishes to act as responsible person. The registration officer's objective will be to obtain timely and accurate information from each address. There will be nothing to prevent a husband and wife from alternating in responding to canvasses if they wish to do so.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how the existing benefits of rate relief for disabled persons will be maintained under the community charge proposals.

Mr. Howard: Under the domestic rating system rateable values are increased to take account of extensions and alterations to property. Rate relief is granted to disabled people to ensure that they do not have to pay higher bills as a result of modifications needed to their homes as a result of their disability.

This problem will not arise with the community charge, because improvements to people's homes will not affect the level of the charge.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements will be made for diplomatic staff resident in Britain to pay the community charge.

Mr. Howard: Foreign diplomats are not liable to pay United Kingdom taxes, including rates, and they will not be liable to pay the community charge. They do, however, make a contribution at present towards the cost of local authority services. We intend to establish arrangements for a similar contribution to be made when the community charge is introduced.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out for each local authority the estimated percentage change in community charge for a one percentage increase in spending, using the figures from the exemplifications deposited in the Library since 11 June; and if he will make a statement explaining why there are differences in the gearing effect.

Mr. Howard: The intention is that there should be a pound for pound relationship between increases in expenditure per adult and the increase in the community charge as a result of the proposals we published on 23 September for the simplification of grant payments. It is also the case that for each local authority there should be a 1 per cent. increase in its gross charge for each 1 per cent. increase in its expenditure. The relationship, in percentage terms, between the aggregate change in expenditure and the change in the community charge for each local authority area will vary from area to area reflecting the relative importance of central grant and non-domestic rates in financing aggregate expenditure in that area. A £1 per adult increase in expenditure should still lead to a £1 increase in the community charge, however. I have placed figures in the Library demonstrating these relationships.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list in the Official Report those authorities budgeting to make contributions from their housing revenue account to the general rate fund in 1987-88, and express those contributions as a percentage of total expenditure and in terms of their effect on the published 1987-88 community charge calculations;

(2) what discussions his officials have had with the Audit Commission about any increase in external audit effort as a result of the introduction of the community charge;

(3) what discussion he has had with, or what representations he has received from the Audit Commission about the likely effect of his reform of local government finance on the economy, efficiency and effectiveness of local authorities;

(4) whether he will provide England-only versions of figures F1 to F5 and J4 to J8 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying For Local Government" to take account of (a) 1987-88 community charge figures, (b) the most recent tax-benefit model and (c) most recent other data;

(5) whether he will provide versions of figures F1 to F5 and J4 to J8 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying For Local Government", showing separately figures for London, metropolitan areas, and shire areas, to take account of (a) 1987-88 community charge figures, (b) the most recent tax-benefit model and (c) most recent other data;

(6) whether he will provide versions of figures J4, J5, J7 and J8 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying For Local Government", showing separately figures for pensioner couples, to take account of (a) 1987-88 community charge figures, (b) the most recent tax-benefit model and (c) most recent other data;

(7) whether he will provide versions of figures J4 to J8 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying For Local Government", showing figures for households with net incomes of under £200 per week, to take account of (a) 1987-88 community charge figures, (b) the most recent tax-benefit model and (c) most recent other data;

(8) whether he will update annexes F and J of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying For Local Government", particularly to take account of (a) 1987-88 community charge figures, (b) the most recent tax-benefit model and (c) most recent other data such as the Family Expenditure Survey;

(9) whether he proposes to make earlier rate support grant settlements in order to allow local authorities to take earlier decisions on levels of community charge;

(10) whether he proposes to amend section 79 of the Local Government Act 1972 so that, following his proposed introduction of a national non-domestic rate, ownership or tenancy of property or place of work cease to be qualifications for election and holding office as a member of a local authority;

(11) if squash clubs and other sports facilities will be exempt from the proposals contained in Cmnd. 9714 "Paying for Local Government", and in the subsequent consultation documents issued by his Department.

Mr. Ridley: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussion he has had with the Salvation Army about the impact of community charge on its activities.

Mr. Ridley: My officials have had two meetings with representatives of the Salvation Army to discuss the community charge.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what opinion polls or market research he has commissioned into attitudes to his proposed reform of local government finance; and whether he will publish the findings.

Mr. Ridley: None.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the local authority associations about the requirements of a community charge rebate scheme.

Mr. Ridley: An initial discussion of the community charge rebate scheme took place at the Housing Benefit Standing Committee on 3 September. We shall be deciding, with the local authority associations, the most appropriate forum for detailed discussions of the rebate scheme.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to protect the privacy of occupants of women's refuges following the compilation of community charge registers.

Mr. Ridley: My officials have arranged to meet representatives of the Women's Aid Federation early next month to discuss the concerns that have been expressed about this issue.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the proposed community charge liability of members of religious orders who have taken vows of poverty.

Mr. Ridley: We are considering the impact of the community charge on people in such religious communities.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions his officials have had with the local government training board on training programmes for canvassers for the community charge register in law, in interview techniques, in interpersonal skills for dealing with hostility and resentment, and in self-defence.

Mr. Ridley: None.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, for the purposes of his proposed exemption from full payment of community charge, he will define (a) full-time student and (b) term time address.

Mr. Ridley: The meaning of the term "full-time students" will be defined in regulations. They will be treated as having their sole or main residence in the places where they are resident for the purpose of undertaking their courses.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what discussions officials from his Department have had with suppliers of computer software about the computing requirements in local government of his proposals for a community charge;

(2) what discussions officials from his Department have had with computer manufacturers about the increased computing capacity local authorities will require to cope with his proposals for a community charge.

Mr. Ridley: My officials have frequent contact with computer manufacturers and software suppliers about the computer systems requirements of the community charge.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra capital resouces he plans to make available to local government in 1988-89 and 1989-90 to enable the purchase of computers and buildings necessary to implement community charge.

Mr. Ridley: It is for local authorities to decide what, if any, capital investment they need to enable them to introduce the community charge efficiently. Estimates of the capital expenditure needed for this purpose will be considered, together with other requirements, in setting the overall provisions for spending in 1988-89 and subsquent years for the other services capital block.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give his estimates of the costs local authorities need to incur on current account in 1988-89 to set up the necessary systems for community charge registration and collection;

(2) what provision in local authorities' 1988-89 current expenditure he has made to take account of setting up the necessary systems for community charge registration and collection.

Mr. Ridley: It is doubtful whether local authorities will need to incur significant current expenditure in preparing for the community charge as early as 1988-89. To the extent that additional costs do arise, we believe that these can be accommodated within the proposed RSG settlement.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the National Council for Civil Liberties about his proposals for a community charge.

Mr. Ridley: I have received no representations from the National Council for Civil Liberties about the community charge. However, I have seen the NCCL's recent report which contains a number of exaggerations and distortions.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish any advice he has received from the Data Protection Registrar on record-keeping aspects of the community charge.

Mr. Ridley: The registrar has confirmed that our proposals do not create any formal conflict with the Data Protection Act. He has, however, pointed to the importance of ensuring that the principles established by the Act are observed in the operation of the community charge system and has expressed concern about the sale of the register.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what research work he has commissioned into the feasibility of local authorities privatising the arrangements for collecting the community charge on the basis of the proposals set out in "Paying for Local Government"; and if he will publish this.

Mr. Ridley: No such research has been commissioned.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans for the following types of hereditament to remain within rating if domestic rates are abolished: (a) time-share properties, (b) moorings, (c) houseboats, (d) caravans, and (e) lock-up garages.

Mr. Ridley: We intend to remove all domestic property from rating, once the community charge has been fully introduced. We propose that time-share properties, houseboat moorings, houseboats and residential caravans should come within the definition of domestic property. Lock-up garages used for residential purposes or in conjunction with residential property will also be treated as domestic property and will not, therefore, be liable to rates.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to prescribe the form in which the community charge register will be kept.

Mr. Ridley: No.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the proposed joint and several liability for community charge will be restricted to couples of different sex living together as husband and wife.

Mr. Ridley: Yes.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recovery procedures he envisages will be necessary in order to secure payment of community charge from persons jointly and severally liable; and whether a demand notice will be required to be issued to one partner in respect of the other's community charge liability.

Mr. Ridley: The recovery procedures will be the same as for individual liability. We envisage that a local authority will be able to take enforcement action against an individual in respect of their partner's failure to pay only when the individual has been sent a demand notice and reminder in respect of the partner's community charge.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans to offer owners of property a discount for collecting community charge; and in what other areas of taxation there is similar recognition of costs of collection.

Mr. Ridley: We propose that landlords of properties designated for the collective community charge should retain 5 per cent. of the collective charge contributions payable to them, as an allowance to cover their administrative costs and notional bad debts. Sections 55 and 56 of the General Rate Act 1967 permit similar recognition of costs of collection in respect of rates.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes that new town development corporations will be able to act as agents for district authorities in the collection of community charge with rents.

Mr. Ridley: Some local authorities currently use new town development corporations as agents to collect rates. I do not propose anything to prevent similar arrangements for the community charge, provided that the statutory requirements we envisage are met—in particular, that tenants should receive separate rent and community charge bills.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it will be possible to collect community charge from council tenants with rent (a) for couples to whom joint and several liability applies or (b) all members of a household.

Mr. Ridley: Local authorities will be able to collect amounts of community charge at the same time as rent, but not to issue inclusive bills.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he proposes to adopt to define those classes of property to which collective community charge will apply.

Mr. Ridley: We propose that the community charges registration officer may designate a property for the collective community charge (i) if in his opinion the property is used wholly or mainly as the sole or main residence of individuals, most or all of whom reside in the property for short periods, and are not solely or mainly resident elsewhere; and (ii) if in his opinion it is likely to be difficult to register the individuals for the personal community charge and to collect the personal charge from each of them.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to ensure individual authorities are assisted in the cost of implementation of community charge in order to aviod the cost to ratepayers of such increases in spending being increased by the effect of negative marginal rates of grant.

Mr. Ridley: I shall take into account the estimated cost of implementating the community charge when I consider the level of relevant expenditure for the purposes of the remaining rate support grant settlements under existing arrangements. After 1990, under the new grant system, grant entitlements will not vary with expenditure and there will be no negative marginal rates of grant.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions of the Data Protection Act he proposes will apply (a) to the ability of community charge registration officers to seek information to ensure accuracy of the community charge register and (b) to the community charge register.

Mr. Ridley: We do not propose to disapply any of the provisions of the Data Protection Act.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will prohibit local authorities from carrying out canvasses for the community charge register at the same time as canvasses to compile the electoral register.

Mr. Ridley: The timing of community charge canvasses will be a matter for individual community charge registration officers.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether local authorities will be empowered to offer for sale copies of the community charge register.

Mr. Ridley: I propose to take a regulation-making power which would enable me to authorise the sale of the register. I shall consider carefully whether and how the power is to be used.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes that the community charge registration officer will be empowered to demand information (a) from other persons within his employing authority, (b) from other local authorities, and (c) from other bodies; and if he will list the information and bodies concerned.

Mr. Ridley: We propose that the community charge registration officer should be empowered to require the supply of information needed for the carrying out of his functions from his own local authority, from other local authorities and their community charge registration officers.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether the following records will be required to be made available to community charge registration officers (a) housing benefit records, (b) educational records held by local education authorities' institutions and by local education authorities' (c) educational records held by universities, (d) educational records held by independent schools, (e) planning and building control records, (f) local authority rent rolls, (g) housing association rent rolls, (h) new town rent rolls, (i) housing waiting lists, (j) register of births, deaths and marriages, (k) environmental health records, (l) social services records, (m) local authorities' payroll record, (n) other employers' payroll records, (o) library records, (p) concessionary fare records, (q) insurance claims made upon authorities, and (r) public utilities records;

(2) if he will list any categories of information he proposes to exclude from the communtity charge register.

Mr. Ridley: We propose that, for the purposes of compiling their registers, community charges registration officers should have access to all information held by local authorities, with the exception of material of great personal sensitivity, which will be prescribed by the Secterary of State. They will not have access to national sources of data.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to extend the Data Protection Act safeguards on computerised information to non-computerised information held for the purposes of community charge registration and collection.

Mr. Ridley: No.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether other departments of a local authority will have access to records held by the community charge registration officer for the purposes of registration for community charge, and to records held by the appropriate officer for the purposes of collection of community charge.

Mr. Ridley: We propose that the electoral registration officer should be given a right of access to the community charges register. We do not propose to give local authorities a right of access to the register or to collection records, other than for the purposes of billing, payment and enforcement of the community charge.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether individuals will have the right to inspect all information held about them for community charge purposes.

Mr. Ridley: We propose that individuals should have the right to inspect all information held about them on the community charge register. Individuals also have rights to inspect data held about them under the Data Protection Act 1984.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to change the dates by which (a) precepts, and (b) rates, and possibly community charge, have to be made in order to allow local authorities to accommodate the receipt of community charge in 12 monthly instalments.

Mr. Ridley: We propose that everyone should have the right to pay the community charge by a minimum of 10 instalments, as they do at present with rates. It will not therefore be necessary to bring forward the dates by which precepts and community charges have to be set.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the average daily rate per capita of any collective community charge to be paid by occupants of vagrants' hostels in inner London based on his 1987-88 figures; and whether this will be required to be paid net or gross of rebates.

Mr. Ridley: On the basis of the exemplifications placed in the Library on 29 June, column 44, the average daily collective community charge payment in inner London would be £1·52. This figure is illustrative only, for the reasons I set out on 29 June. Nor does it take account of rebates. The arrangements for paying rebates will be announced in due course.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether occupants of hostels for vagrants, such as those run by the Salvation Army, will be exempt from community charge by virtue of their being in institutions providing care.

Mr. Ridley: We have not yet finalised our definition of "hostel" for these purposes. But we envisage that exemptions would be limited to hostels providing a planned programme of care.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether community charge rebates will be available in respect of standard community charge paid on second homes.

Mr. Ridley: No.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how sole or main residence will be defined for the purposes of establishing liability for personal community charge.

Mr. Ridley: We do not propose to define sole or main residence. Paragraphs 5 and 6 of the booklet entitled "Paying for Local Government. The Community Charge", which was placed in the Library on 15 December 1986, described how sole or main residence will be determined.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers of enforcement and recovery of community charge he expects to be able to be deployed against non-householders.

Mr. Ridley: Local authorities will be able to apply to magistrates' courts for warrants authorising distress and attachment of earnings. In each case, they will be able to choose either, or both, methods of recovery.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the right to pay community charge by instalments will be limited by virtue of his prescribing a minimum instalment.

Mr. Ridley: We propose to prescribe the minimum community charge instalment which local authorities will be obliged to accept. They will, however, be free to accept smaller instalments if they wish.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether arrears of community charge will be deducted at source from income support paid by the Department of Health and Social Security.

Mr. Ridley: I have no present plans to do so.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to allow the community charge bills in respect of couples whom authorities think are jointly and severally liable to be sent to an address in one envelope.

Mr. Ridley: We propose that each individual should receive a separate bill for his or her community charge. If the bill is sent by post, it should be addressed to the person liable to pay it.

Glass (Recycling)

Mr. Haselhurst asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the district councils in England, Scotland and Wales that do not have glass recycling programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Records of glass recycling schemes are not maintained centrally. Schemes may be run by a variety of bodies—district or borough councils, waste disposal authorities, town councils or voluntary groups. However, the Glass Manufacturers' Federation has provided the following list of district or borough councils showing those authorities which do not themselves operate bottle bank schemes. Some of the councils listed hope to start schemes in the next few months. The viability of a recycling scheme depends to a large extent on the ease of transport to the processing plant which is why it has been difficult to establish schemes in some of the more remote areas.

I have been pleased to see an encouraging increase in both the number of bottle banks in use and the amount of glass collected. The glass industry and local authorities are committed to doubling the number of bottle banks in the country in the five years from 1986 to give an average of one for every 10,000 people. This is an important element in the United Kingdom's programme for implementing the EEC directive on containers of liquids for human consumption.

British Coal (Houses)

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of the negotiations between British Coal and the Consortium of Housing Associations led by CIPFA Services over the sale of British Coal houses in Nottinghamshire; and whether his Department is prepared to make resources available to make up any difference between British Coal's asking price and the consortium's offer.

Mrs. Roe: We understand that these negotiations are still in progress, and hope that it will prove possible for the parties to reach agreement. My right hon. Friend, however, does not consider that it would be appropriate for public resources to be used to enable a purchase to proceed on terms more favourable to British Coal than the consortium felt able to offer.

Mr. Meale asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to confer upon the tenants of British Coal houses the right to buy their homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Housing Act 1985 confers the right to buy on secure tenants of local authorities, certain housing associations, new town corporations and some other public bodies with similar functions, but there are no plans to extend it to tenants of nationalised industries. Tenants of British Coal housing have, however, had the opportunity to buy their homes at discounted prices since 1976.

Mayall Road, SE24 (Envelope Scheme)

Mr. Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to approve phase 2 of the envelope scheme for Mayall road, London S.E.24.

Mrs. Roe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment approved phase II of the Mayall road enveloping scheme on 18 September 1987.

Land Use (Departmental Bulletin)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a synopsis of his Department's statistical bulletin (87/7) regarding land use change in England, with specific reference to the amount of housing development which took place on land which was previously developed or was vacant land in urban areas.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department's statistical bulletin (87)7 gives summary results from the analysis of land use changes as recorded by Ordnance Survey in 1986. These are the second set of results from an experimental project started in 1985. In all, some 23,000 hectares of land in England were recorded in 1986 as having a change of use. About 46 per cent. of land developed for residential use had been previously developed, including land already used for housing purposes, or was vacant land in built-up areas.

This proportion varies across the regions from 31 per cent. in the east midlands to 59 per cent. in the north-west.

CoSIRA (Membership)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list (a) the members of the Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas, (b) the criteria for selection of members, (c) the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places and (e) how many Trades Union Congress-nominated places are held by women.

Mr. Moynihan: The information is as follows:

(a) The present members of the board of directors of the Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas (CoSIRA) are:
D. Davenport (chairman), Lord Vinson (chairman, Development Commission), A. M. J. Galsworthy, G. P. Gray, J. L. Thompson, M. B. Ferris, Mrs. P. Batty Shaw, Professor M. D. I. Chisholm, A. Leavett, R. Thompson, Lord Gisborough, M. Schreiber, A. D. Scott (chief executive, CoSIRA), J. V. Williams (chief executive, Development Commission).

(b) As CoSIRA is a company limited by guarantee, directors are appointed by the board with the approval of the Development Commission, CoSIRA's parent body. There are no set criteria, and directors are usually chosen for their knowledge of small businesses, finance, commerce, trade unions, public or voluntary service, or a more general involvement in rural affairs.

(c) The present directors of CoSIRA have a wide range of knowledge about the rural economy but were not selected individually because of any particular interest or expertise.

(d) and (e) No directors are nominated by outside bodies.

Commission for New Towns (Membership)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list (a) the members of the Commission for New Towns, (b) the criteria for selection of members, (c) the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places and (e) how many Trades Union Congress-nominated places are held by women.

Mrs. Roe: The members of the Commission for the New Towns are:

Sir Neil Shields MC (chairman)
Mr. A. Jones FSVA (deputy chairman)
Mr. E. G. Barratt MA, FCA
Lord Bellwin LL.B, JP
Mr. R. B. Caws CBE, FRICS
Mr. R. G. Luff FRICS
Mr. W. J. Mackenzie OBE
Mr. M. H. Mallinson FRICS
Sir Gordon Roberts CBE, JP, DL
Mr. P M. Vine CBE, MA, LL.M, M. Phil DL

Members are selected for the contributions they can make to the work of the commission which relates primarily to property management and the disposal of assets. Neither the Trades Union Congress nor any other organisation has any places in its gift.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is preventing the publication of the revised listed buildings arising out of the resurvey of listed buildings in the south Northamptonshire district.

Mr. Moynihan: The resurvey of listed buildings in south Northamptonshire forms part of a national exercise. Four of the nine lists for the district have now been published, and the remainder will be issued by early next year.

Engineers Direct Labour Department (Northampton)

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the light of three year losses, he will now call for a formal report on the Northampton borough council engineers direct labour department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Northampton borough council has not sent the Department a copy of its 1986-87 direct labour organisation report yet. Previous reports show that the DLO made a loss on highways work in only one of the three preceding years. Therefore, there is at present no case for requiring the council to prepare a special report.

No-Fines Dwellings (Walsall)

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what report was received from his officials who saw the deputation on 22 July from the residents of the Wimpey No-Fines dwellings in the Walsall area; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if an official from his Department has visited the Wimpey No-Fines dwellings in the Blakenall area of Walsall; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the estimated total cost of carrying out work to the Wimpey No-Fines dwellings in the Blakenall area of Walsall that would bring them up to satisfactory conditions;

(4) when his Department was first notified of the conditions of the Wimpey No-Fines dwellings in the Blakenall area of Walsall; and whether those conditions exist in such properties in other boroughs;

(5) if discussions have taken place between his officials and the Walsall metropolitan borough council over the state of the Wimpey No-Fines dwellings in the Blakenall area of Walsall; and if he will make a statement;

(6) if he will publish in the Official Report the lists of defects in the Wimpey No-Fines dwellings in the Blakenall area of Walsall notified to him by the deputation of tenants of those dwellings.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 22 July my officials met a deputation of residents of Wimpey No-Fines houses on the Blakenall estate, Walsall, led by the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick). I received from my officials a detailed note of the meeting, a summary of the points raised, and a copy of the report, prepared by the Blakenall Estate Residents' Association, which described the problems affecting their houses. The deputation complained that these houses were damp, cold, draughty and poorly maintained. I have arranged for a copy of their report to be placed in the Library.

An official from my Department visited the Wimpey No-Fines houses on the Blakenall and Bentley estates in Walsall on 9 September, in company with the hon. Member for Walsall, North, and members and officers of Walsall metropolitan borough council. The visit provided a useful opportunity to assess conditions on the two estates, and to hear the council's proposals for repair and improvement of the houses. The council estimated the basic cost of repairing each Wimpey No-Fines house (excluding new windows) to be £3,500. If heating and insulation were to be improved at the same time, a further £1,500 would be required. On this basis, the total estimated cost of repair and improvement for the 74 council-owned Wimpey No-Fines houses on the Blakenall estate is £370,000.

Officials from my Department subsequently met the council's officers on 16 September to discuss the council's housing investment programme for 1988-89. All aspects of housing need in the borough, including the improvement of Wimpey No-Fines dwellings, were discussed. This will be taken into account when the Department comes to make the housing investment programme allocations for 1988-89, but it will remain a matter for Walsall MBC to decide its own priorities within the resources available to it.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration has been given to designating the Wimpey No-Fines dwellings as defective; and what representations have been received over this matter.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Secretary of State has received no specific requests for designation of Wimpey No-Fines houses as defective under the housing defects legislation; nor has he any plans to make such a designation.

Housing Deputations

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many deputations led by hon. Members from residents complaining over the state of their properties have been received by Ministers in the last four years; and what are the criteria by which it is decided whether a Minister will meet such a deputation.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no meaningful figures available on the number of such deputations received by Ministers over the last four years. Any request for a meeting is considered on its merits.

Common Land

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to introduce legislation to remedy the problems arising from the misregistration of property as common land.

Mr. Moynihan I shall answer this question shortly.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many families, per London borough, are currently in bed-and-breakfast accommodation; and what were the relevant figures for 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Waldegrave: Local authorities report the numbers of households living, at the end of each quarter, in bed-and-breakfast accommodation provided by the authorities during inquiries under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 or awaiting permanent accommodation. The figures reported by the London boroughs are as follows:

Number of households at end of June

Housing Programme (Islington)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the level of housing capital programme for Islington at 1987 prices for each year since 1979.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following are estimates in 1986-87 prices of the gross expenditure in cash prices reported in the borough's housing investment programme returns.

Islington LB
Gross housing capital expenditure
1986-87 prices

	£ million
1979-80	90·6
1980-81	65·5
1981-82	50·0
1982-83	70·6

1984-85	54·4
1985-86	33·1
1986-87	64·3

In addition, Housing Corporation expenditure on housing association schemes of provision for fair rent within the borough is estimated, at 1986-87 prices, to have been £11·9 million in 1984-85, £10·9 million in 1985-86 and £15 million in 1986-87.

Teddington Weir (Minimum Flow)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning his decision on the application by the Thames water authority to reduce the statutory minimum flow of water over Teddington weir, stating the old and new limits; and what effects he expects this will have on the quality of water in the upper tidal Thames.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's decision letter of 31 July and the inspector's report, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. I am sending the hon. Member a copy.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the principal responses he has received to his consultative paper on the proposed national rivers authority.

Mr. Moynihan: In the policy and consultation paper on the national rivers authority, we asked respondents to indicate whether they agreed that a copy of their response could be placed in the Library of the House. Responses are still being received. Where agreement has been given, we shall be publishing responses in this way in due course.

Beaches (EC Standards)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available resources to bring beaches along the north Devon coastline up to European Community standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The responsibility for ensuring that the bathing waters in north Devon meet the standards set in directive 76/160/EEC rests with the South-West water authority. It is for the authority in the first instance to submit details of its spending needs to the Government in its annual corporate plan. Decisions on plans will be made in the light of each authority's overall spending needs. My right hon. Friend expects to be able to make allocations of external finance to each authority for 1988-89 later this year. Allocations are not made for specific projects or policies.

Landlord and Tenant Act 1987

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to bring into force the remaining provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: We aim to make in December the commencement order for part I (right of first refusal), part VI (information to be supplied to tenants) and some other minor provisions. We hope to bring the remainder of the Act into force as early as possible next year.

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Landlord and Tenant Act will be brought into operation.

Mrs. Roe: We aim to make in December the commencement order for part I (right of first refusal), part VI (information to be supplied to tenants) and some other minor provisions. We hope to bring the remainder of the Act into force as early as possible next year.

Right to Buy (Camden)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has now taken to ensure that the London borough of Camden complies with its statutory obligations in connection with right-to-buy applications from its tenants.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Secretary of State has been considering whether to use his power to intervene and take over sales in view of the council's failure to comply with the statutory deadlines for the handling of applications. I understand that the council has now decided to create new posts to deal with this work, that instructions have been given for the staff to be recruited as soon as possible, and that recruitment is in hand. When all the posts are filled, the council expects to be able to issue 120 to 140 offer notices each month. The Department will continue to monitor progress closely.

Newham (Strategic Plans)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which estimates he and the London Docklands Development Corporation have made following the adoption of the strategic plans he announced in March of the likely maximum and minimum increase in the population of southern Newham in the course of the next decade.

Mr. Trippier: None, but in the strategy agreed for the royals it was estimated that about 6,850 new homes would be built in south Newham on LDDC land. At an average occupancy rate of 2·5 persons per unit, these homes might accommodate about 17,000 people.

New River Water Company (Assets)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any applications concerning the transfer of ownership of the reservoirs, land, equipment, water channels, and the other assets of the former New River Water Company to the (a) Lea valley regional park, and (b) any other public authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: No.

Royal Docks (Development)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what communication he has received from the London Docklands Development Corporation concerning plans for the development of the north-eastern sector of the Royal docks; if he will indicate the extent to which these plans are a departure from the statutory development plan and the main features of the application; and if he will make it his policy to call in this application for public inquiry, stating the criteria on which he expects to make his decision.

Mr. Trippier: The London Docklands Development Corporation has referred to my Department an outline planning application submitted by Rosehaugh Stanhope Developments plc for a business park, residential, marine development, shopping centre and associated leisure facilities on the Royal Albert dock and Harland and Wolff site, London E16, and land south of Winsor terrace and east of East Ham Manor way, E6. In the opinion of the corporation's planning committee

"the proposal is in conflict with or prejudicial to the implementation of a number of fundamental provisions of the initial development for Greater London, the Greater London development plans and the Beckton district plan."

The proposed development also includes gross shopping floor space in excess of 250,000 sq ft.

In considering whether or not to call in the application for public inquiry, my right hon. Friend will take into account all relevant matters. Applications are, in general, called in only if planning issues of more than local importance are involved. The full criteria were spelt out by my right hon. Friend on 5 May 1987.

Rental Purchase Tenure

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the increase in rental purchase tenure in the north-west of England; and what are his plans for dealing with this matter.

Mrs. Roe: I have received representations from Shelter and from the Association of Metropolitan Authorities about the increase in rental purchase tenure in the north-west of England and am considering whether any action is needed.

Local Authorities (Companies Information)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have been requested to supply information relating to companies controlled by the relevant authority.

Mr. Howard: A total of 405; that is, all county, metropolitan district and district councils in England, all London boroughs, the City of London and the Council of the Isles of Scilly.

Textiles

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to support the submission to the European Commission from local authorities in the Manchester area for a separate national programme of community interest relating to textile areas in order to consolidate the work begun by the textile non quota programme.

Mr. Trippier: In submitting national programmes of community interest to the European Commission, the Government are mindful of the needs and available resources of all local authorities within a particular region. My officials will be happy to consider and discuss the proposals made by the six Greater Manchester metropolitan district councils which currently benefit from the special textile measure, in the light of other proposals for ERDF programmes in the north-west.

Home Improvements

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will expedite the implementation of the provisions of section 15 of and schedule 3 to the Housing and Planning Act 1986 with a view to assisting home owners to obtain improvement grants where title to the whole of the roof of a property is not proved.

Mrs. Roe: I anticipate that the statutory instruments required to implement the provisions of section 15 of, and schedule 3 to, the Housing and Planning Act 1986, which provide for a new discretionary home improvement grant to be made available to both landlords and long leaseholders or tenants for works to the common parts of blocks of flats, will be laid before Parliament before the Christmas recess.

Gipsies (Planning Applications)

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will amend paragraphs 40 and 41 of his circular 28/77 so as to exclude those local authorities which have a designation order under the Caravan Sites Act and which have provided the required number of pitches from the requirement to adopt a sympathetic and flexible approach to planning applications from gipsies.

Mrs. Roe: No. In planning cases where the need for gipsy sites is a material consideration my right hon. Friend and his inspectors will have regard to the existence of any designation order and to all other relevant matters when deciding what weight to attach to the paragraphs of the circular to which my hon. Friend refers.

Mapesbury Conservation Area

Mr. Livingstone asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he has taken 18 months to confirm the direction under article 4 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977 to protect the character of the Mapesbury conservation area which was submitted by the London borough of Brent.

Mrs. Roe: The specific powers under which the article 4 direction was made by Brent council in February 1986 meant that, unless approved by my right hon. Friend within six months, it would lapse. The direction was an extensive one covering over 700 properties and raised a number of problems which prevented its approval. The Department wrote to the council in September 1986 explaining the position, and the council responded with a number of further queries and an outline of a new direction for comment. I regret that the case has not been dealt with more expeditiously since then. However, officials have recently met council officers and are writing to the council setting out clearly the steps it should take in submitting a revised article 4 direction dealing with the points raised.

Defective Housing

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider ways and means of assisting Liverpool city council to meet the needs of tenants of Truscon RD27 type houses where the local ombudsman has called for action to eradicate structural faults and carry out essential repairs.

Mrs. Roe: It is for Liverpool city council to consider how it should respond to the local ombudsman's findings concerning council-owned Truscon RD27 houses, including how any expenditure needs might be met from within the council's resources. The council discussed its overall resource position with my Department's officers on 12 October and this will be taken into account in our decisions on HIP allocations for 1988-89.

Urban Regeneration Grants

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total cost of projects for which urban regeneration grants have been made; and what percentage of the projects was formed by the grants.

Mr. Trippier: One offer of urban regeneration grant has been made towards a scheme costing £17·5 million in all to reclaim and develop the former Round Oak steelworks site in Dudley. The grant offered is £3·25 million representing 18·5 per cent. of the total cost.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been spent on urban regeneration grants to the latest convenient date; and how many projects were involved in the expenditure.

Mr. Trippier: There has been no expenditure.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many current applications are being considered for urban regeneration grants; and if he can give the information by region.

Mr. Trippier: Over 30 possible schemes seeking urban regeneration grant have been or are being discussed with the Department. Twelve schemes have reached the stage where they are being appraised. The regional breakdown of these is as follows:

	Number
North-West	6
Yorkshire and Humberside	4
West Midlands	2

Four of these schemes involve a number of sub-projects (21 in one case) each of which will be appraised and decided separately.

Estates Action

Mr. Livingstone asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by when he estimates that the estates action programme will have spent all the £75 million allocated to it in the current financial year; whether sufficient bids have been received from local authorities to make this possible; and if he will itemise the bids received and their current status with the estates action programme.

Mrs. Roe: I will write to the hon. Member.

Housing Associations (Tenants)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statememt on the progress of the home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations; how many tenants have availed themselves of the scheme to date; what restrictions there are on the numbers of persons who may do so; how many persons are waiting; and over what period of time.

Mrs. Roe: The home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations was introduced in September 1984 to help tenants who would have had the right to buy but for the charitable status of their landlords. It has proved very popular and approximately 4,600 properties have been purchased on the open market. However, demand outstrips the resources available for discounts under the scheme, the cost of which has to be accommodated within the Housing Corporation's cash limited approved development programme. As a result, a waiting list has been in force since 1 October 1986; at the end of September some 1,900 applications were being held. I am currently reviewing the funding position.

Corrigendum

Official Report, 15 May 1987, Written Answers, c. 440: At line 27, before "Employment" insert the following:

Surrogacy Agencies

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent information he has collected on the operation of surrogacy arrangement agencies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: The operation of commercial surrogacy agencies is prohibited under the Surrogacy Arrangements Act 1985. We have received no information indicating there have been any possible breaches of the Act since the reply I gave to my hon. Friend on 15 January at column 300.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Attorney-General if he will provide details of each legal action commenced by the Government in respect of the book "Spycatcher", what has been the outcome in each case; and what has been the total cost in each case to date.

The Solicitor-General: The High Court of Australia will hear in about March 1988 the Government's appeal against the judgment of the New South Wales Court of Appeal in the action brought against Heinemann (Australia) and Mr. Peter Wright to restrain publication of material attributed to Mr. Wright and to seek an account of profits. The total amount of costs expended to date by the Government in the Australian proceedings is about £299,750.

In this country, the House of Lords in July upheld the interim injunction obtained last year restraining the publication of material attributed to Mr. Wright. The trial of the Government's action against The Guardian and The Observer newspapers, in which the High Court has agreed that The Sunday Times should be joined, is due to start in November. The total amount of costs expended to date by the Government in these proceedings is about £120.

In New Zealand an interim injunction was obtained in August against The Dominion newspaper restraining the publication of material attributed to Mr. Wright. The trial is due to start next month. Earlier this month an interim injunction was obtained against London Books to restrain them from importing, selling or distributing "Spycatcher"; and, after proceedings had been instituted against them, Heinemann (New Zealand) gave an undertaking to the same effect. The total amount of costs expended to date by the Government in the New Zealand proceedings is about £13,400.

In Hong Kong an interim injunction was obtained in August against the South China Morning Post newspaper. No date for the hearing of the substantive action has yet been set. The total amount of costs expended to date by the Government in the Hong Kong proceedings is about £730.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Caribbean Development Bank

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonweath Affairs what contribution the Government are proposing to make to the recently announced second replenishment of the Caribbean development bank's special development fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Subject to Parliament's approval, the Government propose to contribute US $15 million (£9,252,510) to the fund. This will be 50 per cent. more than our contribution to the first replenishment. The replenishment will facilitate a lending programme of $132 million mainly to the poorer Caribbean countries during the years 1988 to 1991.

Bilateral Aid

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government will present their observations on the second report of the Foreign Affairs Committee on bilateral aid; H.C. 32 of Session 1986-87.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government's observations on the Foreign Affairs Committee report on bilateral aid are being laid before Parliament today.

ENERGY

UKAEA

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will list (a) the members of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, (b) the criteria for selection of members, (c) the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places and (e) how many Trades Union Congress-nominated places are held by women.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Atomic Energy Authority Act 1954 provides for the Secretary of State for Energy to appoint the chairman and not less than seven nor more than 15 other members of the UKAEA. Clause 1(3) of the Act requires the Secretary of State to appoint at least three members with experience and capacity in dealing with problems associated with atomic energy, one member with experience and capacity in administration and finance, and one member with experience and capacity in the organisation of workers.

The members of the authority and their relevant qualifications are as follows:

Chairman
Mr. J. G. Collier—Expertise in nuclear science.

Full-time Members
Dr. B. L. Eyre—Expertise in nuclear science.
Dr. G. G. E. Low—Expertise in nuclear science.
Mr. R. N. Simeone, CBE—Expertise in Finance and Administration

Part-time Members
Mr. J. Bullock—Accounting expertise.
Professor Sir Peter Hirsch, FRS—Expertise in nuclear science.
Mr. M. J. B. Parker—Industrial expertise.
Mr. R. E. J. Roberts, CBE—Industrial expertise.
Mr. R. Sanderson, OBE—Expertise in organisation of workers. (National Officer of the EETPU).

There are no Trades Union Congress-nominated places.

Domestic Gas Disconnections

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about the number of domestic gas disconnections in each of the past three years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This is a matter for British Gas plc. I have asked the chairman of British Gas to write to the hon. Member.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Political Party Conferences

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from the appropriate chief constables as to the estimated cost of policing (a) the Labour party conference and (b) the Conservative party conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constables of Sussex and Lancashire that the estimated additional costs of policing the Labour party conference and the Conservative party conference were £23,000 and £829,000, respectively.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has obtained a copy of the book "Spycatcher".

Mr. Hurd: The Government were provided with a copy of Mr. Wright's book by his legal advisers in 1986 in connection with the legal proceedings taking place in Australia.

Mr. Michael Dobbs

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why was Mr. V. N. Minas, a consultant psychiatrist refused permission on 21 August to examine Mr. Michael Dobbs at the Ashford remand centre.

Mr. John Patten: The refusal resulted from a regrettable misunderstanding. A letter of apology is to be sent to Mr. Minas.

Metropolitan Police (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers from the Metropolitan Police have been seconded to duties in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No formal secondments have been made, but under normal co-operation arrangements some officers may have been temporarily attached to the RUC over this period.

Political Asylum

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications have been received for political asylum in each year since 1979; which countries were involved; how many were granted; and how many are still outstanding.

Mr. Hurd: Information on applications, grants and cases outstanding by nationality for 1979 to 1984 was published in tables 5A-5F of Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom, 1985" (issue 12/86). The corresponding figures for 1985 (which have been revised since the issue of that bulletin) and 1986 were published in tables 6 and 7 of the corresponding bulletin for 1986 (issue 13/87).

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants for political asylum have died in the United Kingdom since 1979 whilst their applications were being considered.

Mr. Renton: This information is not available. There were over 28,000 asylum applications between 1979 and 1986 and the overwhelming majority of applicants were either already here, having been admitted in another category, or were granted temporary admission on arrival. Since in these circumstances the death of an applicant might well not come to the attention of the Home Office at all, or only sometime after it had taken place, it would be impracticable to keep records.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what efforts are made to monitor the subsequent fate of applicants for political refugee status refused by his Department.

Mr. Hurd: There is no obligation under the UN convention on refugees to monitor unsuccessful applicants for refugee status returned abroad. However, such decisions would be taken only after the most careful consideration of the facts in each case together with information and views available from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, British posts abroad and international agencies—especially the office of the UN High Commission for Refugees—specialising in refugee matters. Refusal of refugee status does not automatically result in removal: many applicants in practice qualify to remain under some other head.

Football Clubs (Police Services)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how much was (a) charged and (b) paid by each football club in London for police services in the 1986-87 season and 1987-88 season to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information requested is as follows:

	Season 1986-87		Season 1987-88
Club	Charged £	Paid £	Charged £	Paid £

Storm Damage

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria for proclaiming a state of civil emergency; and if consideration was given to such a declaration arising from the consequences of the storm which hit London on the morning of 16 October.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Emergency Powers Act 1920 allows for a state of emergency to be declared if there is a threat to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the life of the community. Although conditions in the south-east of England were bad, the emergency services, local and other authorities were able to cope with the demand on them, and there was no reason to think that the declaration of a state of emergency would have substantially improved their efforts.

Ms. Richardson asked the Prime Minister what is (a) the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated members of public bodies and (b) the number of women Trades Union Congress-nominated members of public bodies.

National School for Public Administration

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister if she will urgently undertake to create a national school for public administration such as the French and other Governments have for their public and civil servants.

The Prime Minister: We have devised a range of training provisions for civil servants in the United Kingdom to meet the needs of Government. I do not think a national school for public administration is necessary in these circumstances.

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister how many Conservative hon. and right hon. Members have received hospitality in 10 Downing street in each of the past five years.

The Prime Minister: A number of Members of Parliament, of various parties, come to official functions at 10 Downing street during the course of the year. Detailed records are available only at disproportionate cost.

Notes:

[1] The figures include costs at both 10 Downing street and Chequers; the information is not available by location.

[2] Costs for 1986-87 include, for the first time, the costs of office services attributed to 10 Downing street. Salaries and wages, notional pension liability and administration costs and the grant-in-aid to the Chequers Trust are included for both years. The salary of the Prime Minister is excluded.

[3] To produce consistent figures, office service costs for 1986-87 have been excluded.

[4] Constant costs have been calculated using the Treasury's GDP deflator for 1985-86 rebased to 1984-85.

Space and Maritime Research

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister if she will detail Government policy towards joint ventures with other European countries in matters of space research, maritime experiments.

The Prime Minister: Subject to overall funding constraints, the Government will continue to collaborate on cost-effective space ventures both within the programmes of the European Space Agency and, where appropriate, under separate bilateral and multilateral initiatives with European countries.

The United Kingdom has taken an active part in supporting co-operative research in maritime navigation aids through the European cost programme. We also co-operate with the signatories to the Bonn agreement on pollution control in the North sea, as well as supporting EEC efforts in the community research centre at Ispra.

South Africa (Atrocities)

Mr. Wray asked the Prime Minister what information the British Embassy in Pretoria has passed to her regarding alleged atrocities committed against children by the South African regime.

The Prime Minister: Her Majesty's embassy at Pretoria has provided regular reports on abuses of human rights in South Africa including the alleged mistreatment of children held in detention.

Official Duties (Costs)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister what was the total cost to public funds of the Prime Minister in all her offices, duties, accommodation and expenses in the year 1986-87.

The Prime Minister: The cost of all my offices in 1986-87 was £4,995,392[1].

Note:

[1] Salaries and wages, notional pension liability and administration costs and the grant-in-aid to the Chequers Trust are included. My salary as a Cabinet Minister is included. My pay and allowances as a Member of this House are excluded.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister what was the total cost to public funds of her visit to Canada and the United States of America in October, broken down by category of expenditure.

The Prime Minister: I have only just returned from visiting Canada and the United States of America and it is too soon to give detailed information of the cost to public funds of the visit. A provisional estimate of the total cost of the visit is £160,000. It is not yet possible to break this down by category of expenditure.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister what was the cost of official entertainment associated with the office of Prime Minister in 1986-87.

The Prime Minister: The cost of official entertainment associated with my office in 1986-87 was £20,278.

Conservative Party Conference (Policing)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister what was the total cost for policing the 1987 Conservative party conference in Blackpool; and how many arrests were made in connection with the policing operation there.

The Prime Minister: I understand from the chief constable of Lancashire that the estimated additional costs of policing the Conservative party conference were £829,500. The Lancashire police made three arrests in connection with their operation at the conference between 5 and 9 October 1987.

Engagements

Mr. Rooker asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 October.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 October.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 October.

Mr. Latham asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 22 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRANSPORT

BA/B-Cal Merger

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the British independent airlines concerning the proposed British Airways/British Caledonian merger.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The proposed merger has been referred by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. Several airlines made representations to my right hon. Friend before the referral and all subsequent representations have been made to the commission. The commission's business is conducted in private and I cannot therefore disclose details of evidence which has been copied to my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what would be the combined market share of British Airways and British Caledonian in terms of their percentage of the British share of scheduled traffic to Amsterdam, Brussels, Copenhagen, Frankfurt, Geneva, Munich, Paris and Zurich;

(2) what would be the combined market share of British Airways and British Caledonian in terms of their percentage of the British share of scheduled traffic to Amsterdam;

(3) what would be the combined market share of British Airways and British Caledonian in terms of their percentage of the British share of scheduled traffic to Brussels;

(4) what would be the combined market share of British Airways and British Caledonian in terms of their percentage of the British share of scheduled traffic to Copenhagen;

(5) what would be the combined market share of British Airways and British Caledonian in terms of their percentage of the British share of scheduled traffic to Frankfurt;

(6) what would be the combined market share of British Airways and British Caledonian in terms of their percentage of the British share of scheduled traffic to Geneva;

(7) what would be the combined market share of British Airways and British Caledonian in terms of their percentage of the British share of scheduled traffic to Munich;

(8) what would be the combined market share of British Airways and British Caledonian in terms of their percentage of the British share of scheduled traffic to Paris;

(9) what would be the combined market share of British Airways and British Caledonian in terms of their percentage of the British share of scheduled traffic to Zurich.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The most recently available published information is for traffic from London airports in 1985. It is as follows:

	United Kingdom airlines' share of traffic	BA/BCal share of traffic carried by United Kingdom airlines
	Per cent.	Per cent.
Amsterdam	49	94

Zurich	42	84
Total (for all eight routes)	48	96

Source: The International Civil Aviation Organisation's report "Traffic by Flight Stage". Routes from London to the destinations shown comprise services from Heathrow, Gatwick, Stansted and Luton airports.

Launches and Hovercraft

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the adequacy and equitability of existing primary legislation and statutory instruments relating to the design and operation of fast launches and hovercraft in providing a framework for accommodating recent technical advance and innovation in this field; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Existing primary legislation and statutory instruments provide a suitable framework for accommodating recent technical advance and innovation relating to design and operation of fast launches and hovercraft. Hovercraft are covered under special hovercraft legislation and other high speed dynamically supported craft carrying passengers are covered by merchant shipping legislation supplemented by the International Maritime Organisation code of safety for dynamically supported craft.

LRT (Board Salaries and Expenses)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the salaries and expenses of the board members of London Regional Transport; and if he will state when the next review is due.

Traffic Control (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has settled the invoice for £827,100 issued by the London residuary body in respect of value added tax on traffic control work undertaken by the road assessment unit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Traffic control work carried out by the London residuary body for the Department of Transport under the provisions of paragraph 10 of schedule 5 to the Local Government Act 1985 does not attract value added tax.

WALES

Craig-y-Nos

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the future of Craig-y-Nos.

Mr. Grist: The building is a grade II* listed building and I am considering proposals that the theatre part of it should be listed grade I. Decisions concerning the sale will be taken after the decision on the listing of the theatre.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Postal Deliveries

Mr. John Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to how often postal deliveries in central London have been interfered with by industrial action during the past year.

Mr. Butcher: Industrial action by postal workers is primarily a matter for the Post Office board. I therefore do not have comprehensive details of such action. However, I am aware that postal deliveries in central London have been affected by industrial action on a number of occasions over the last year, including 45 disputes which led to the sealing of letter boxes.

BA/B-Cal Merger

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will have regard to the potential impact on airline competition in the European internal market when considering the conditions under which the British Airways/British Caledonian merger might be allowed to proceed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has any plans to meet the chairmen of the British independent airlines before making his decision on the proposed British Airways/British Caledonian merger; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if, in his consideration of the British Airways/British Caledonian merger, he will examine the alternative offer put forward by Air Europe for the British Caledonian short haul operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The proposed acquisition of British Caledonian by British Airways is currently being investigated by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State has power to take action to prevent a merger or to impose conditions only if the commission finds that it might be expected to operate against the public interest. Until the commission's report is published, I cannot comment on the outcome of the investigation.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from the British independent airlines concerning the proposed British Airways/British Caledonian merger.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I and my right hon. and noble Friend have received a number of representations from British independent airlines expressing a range of views. This proposed merger is currently being investigated by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. Since the reference was made, those wishing to make representations have been directed to the commission.

Whale Products

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which fully manufactured goods currently imported into the United Kingdom contain whale products.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has regarding the number of copies of the book "Spycatcher" imported into the United Kingdom to date.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Research Council

Mr. John Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress was made at the meeting of the Research Council of European Community Ministers on 28 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Community's Council of Ministers (Research) met on 28 September 1987 in Brussels. I represented Her Majesty's Government.

Following the waiving of the conciliation procedure by the European Parliament, the Council approved the formal adoption of the European Community's framework programme for research and development for the period 1987 to 1991. The programme provides the basis for Community research activities in a wide range of fields. The main effort is focused on the priority of improving Europe's industrial competitiveness through programmes in information and telecommunications technologies, industrial technologies and new materials, but work is also included on health, the environment, energy (fusion, fission and non-nuclear) and agriculture.

The agreement was based on a total financial provision of 6·480 becu (£4·49 billion) of which 863 mecu (598 million) of new expenditure will not be committed until after 1991. In line with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's agreement at the European Council in June that expenditure on Community research and development should continue at current levels, the sum of 417 mecu (£289 million) has been withheld from the programme. The question of its release will be decided in the light of wider budgetary developments at the European Council in December. The Council noted my statement re-emphasising these conditions as the basis of our agreement to this package.

The Council also agreed a common position on three new or continuation programmes within the framework: RACE (telecommunications); medical and public health and science and technology for development.

Vice-President Narjes outlined the Commission's proposals for the Community's joint research centre (JRC). In the ensuing preliminary informal exchange of views the Council stressed that radical reforms were necessary to make the JRC more relevant to European industrial needs.

The Council also held a short first discussion of the proposals for ESPRIT II. (Information Technologies.)

SCOTLAND

Special Grants Environmental Programme

Mr. Nigel Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those organisations which applied for support under his Department's special grants environmental programme, together with details of the corresponding projects and the level of funding sought, indicating those projects which have been, or are to be, approved for support.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The organisations listed applied for grant under the special grants (environmental) programme which is administered by the Scottish Development Department. The scheme is designed to assist the central management and administrative costs of voluntary bodies in the environmental field which are engaged in environmental conservation or improvement work, co-ordination, or environmental education or training. To be eligible for grant, organisations are required to operate in more than one local authority district. Assistance for project costs is given only in exceptional cases. Details of the level of funding sought in 1987-88, the purpose for which it was sought and the grant offered (where applicable) are shown for each organisation which applied for grant.

Hospital for Sick Children, Yorkhill

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if any tender or offer of settlement has been made in connection with current arbitration between the Greater Glasgow health board and Costain Construction Ltd arising from work carried out on the hospital for sick children at Yorkhill, Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Following negotiations between representatives of the health board and Costain Construction Limited, the firm made an offer of a payment of £3·75 million in settlement of the health board's claim on the basis that each side should meet its own costs, which include half of the costs of administering the arbitration. This offer has been accepted by the health board. I am satisfied that this settlement represents a reasonable and acceptable conclusion to this dispute, taking all considerations into account including the possible outcome and the substantial costs involved in continuing the formal arbitration process.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Payments)

Mr. William Powell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the early payments made by the United Kingdom in August, September and October to the European Commission, as a result of its financial difficulties.

Mr. Brooke: In each of these three months the European Commission estimated that its spending obligations would exceed the revenue available under the 1987 budget. It therefore requested member states, in accordance with article 10(2) of Council regulation 2891/77, to advance by one month the payment of own resources other than VAT. The Government were satisfied that these requests were within the vires of article 10(2) and accordingly made advance payments from the Consolidated Fund on 20 August, 21 September and 20 October, under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972. Payments of levies and duties in the following month have been, or will be, reduced in each case by the amount of the advance.

The Commission also overdrew its accounts with member states, in accordance with article 12(2) of Council regulation 2891/77, in August and September. It expects to do so again in October. The Government have met (or propose to meet) these obligations from the Consolidated Fund, in accordance with section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972. Repayments are made via deductions from subsequent own resources payments.

The amounts involved in these drawings are set out in the following table:

	Early payment of non-VAT own resources under Article 10(2) (reimbursed in following month) £ million	End of month overdraft under Article 12(2) £ million
August	158·0	151·7
September	148·0	109·6
October	145·5	[1]94·0

[1] Estimated

The total amount which the Community is authorised to spend during 1987 remains as set out in the 1987 budget and supplementary budget. There is therefore no net addition to public expenditure arising from the Commission's use of these facilities.

The Community's cash difficulties in 1987 should be resolved before the end of the year as the new system of delayed payment of EAGGF advances, adopted at the Agriculture Council at its meeting on 19-20 October, comes into effect.

Government Departments (Union Representatives)

Mr. Sims asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest details of the numbers of elected union representatives in each of the main Government Departments and of the cost of providing paid time off.

Mr. Brooke: The details for 1986-87 are shown in the following tables. Compared with the position on 1 June 1986, the total amount of paid time off for union business shows a reduction of 77 man years (5 per cent.), with a consequential saving of £0·67 million. This reflects, for the fifth successive year, the tighter control and accountability measures introduced by the revised national facilities agreement in 1982.

Budget Council

Mr. Boswell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Budget Councils held on 17 and 18 September and 1 October.

Mr. Brooke: Further to my answer of 24 July, the Budget Council met on 17-18 September in Brussels and again on 1 October in Luxembourg to resume its discussions on the Commission's preliminary draft budget proposals for 1988. I represented the United Kingdom. I continued to make clear that any draft budget established must respect the Community's own resources ceiling. The Council failed to reach agreement on a draft 1988 budget.

European Monetary System

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any changes have been made to the agreement of 13 March 1979, as amended by the instrument of 10 June 1985, between the central banks of the European Community which lays down the operating procedures for the European monetary system.

Mr. Lilley: At their monthly meeting on 8 September 1987, the governors of the central banks of the member states of the European Community agreed on a number of measures to strengthen the operating mechanisms of the European monetary system. These relate to the duration of the very short-term financing on which central banks can draw through the European monetary co-operation fund (EMCF), the availability in certain circumstances of very short-term financing for intra-marginal interventions, and the acceptance of the official ecu in settlement of outstanding claims resulting from very short-term financing. The governors also agreed to strengthen the procedure for joint monitoring of economic and monetary developments and policies. The details are set out in a comminqué from the committee of central bank governors dated 18 September, a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library.

Fraud Officers

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many fraud officers were employed in the Inland Revenue (a) in May 1980 and (b) in the most recent month for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Inland Revenue employs some 2,400 staff on investigation work in local tax offices and specialist units. The equivalent figure for May 1980 was about 1,500.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. John Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the amount of money raised under the business expansion scheme; how many companies have succeeded in raising finance under the scheme; and what estimates there are of the number of jobs these companies will create.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The available information is as follows:

	Number of companies	Amount invested £ million
1983-84	715	105
1984-85	807	148
1985-86[1]	670	157

[1] Returns received so far.

Final results for 1985-86 are expected to show a slight increase on those quoted above. Data for 1986-87 are not yet to hand. Information on the number of new jobs created as a result of investment under the scheme is not available.

Personal Allowances

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table comparing information available to him on the allowances and reliefs given to single persons and one and two-earner married couples in Germany with those given in the United Kingdom together with the width of the income band at each rate of income tax chargeable.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987]: The information requested is given in the tables, which are supplemented by explanatory notes.

Table 1

	Married couple 120
	(f) (Complex) minimum deduction for "provident expenses" eg Social Security contributions, life assurance premiums etc. Minimum deduction 18 per cent of gross earnings less Christmas allowances (see (d))—all employees

Notes:

1. Conversions from DM to £ sterling have been made on the basis of the latest available OECD estimates of purchasing power parity.
2. In Germany the principal relief for married couples is the "income splitting" system which normally reduces the tax payable by a married couple.
3. In Germany there are also child allowances, single-parent allowances, and various other comparatively minor personal allowances.

Notes:

1. Conversions from DM to £ sterling have been made on the basis of the latest available OECD estimate of purchasing power parity.
2. The tax in this band is computed by complicated arithmetical formulas, which have the effect of progressively increasing the marginal rate from just over 22 per cent. to just under 56 per cent.
3. As mentioned in note 2 to table 1, married couples are normally taxed on the income-splitting system. This will have the effect of doubling all the taxable income figures in this table for such married couples.

Consultancy Costs

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated expenditure in the current year on management and computer consultancy by (a) the Inland Revenue, (b) Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and (c) the Department of National Savings.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987]: The estimated expenditure in the current financial year on management and computer consultancy is as follows:

	£ million
(a) The Inland Revenue	12·5
(b) Her Majesty's Customs and Excise	4·3
(c) The Department for National Savings	0·54

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated expenditure of all Government Departments in the current year on management and computer consultancy.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987]: Comprehensive information on consultancy costs is not gathered centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate costs, but it is estimated that about £100 million will be spent on computer consultancy in 1987-88, and about £25 million on management consultancy.

Child Benefit

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many and what proportion of families with children receive more in child benefit than they pay out in income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987]: In 1987-88, it is estimated that some 2¼ million families, about one third of the total number of families claiming child benefit, will receive more in child benefit than they pay in income tax.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Pension Schemes

Mr. David Howell asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will take steps to ensure that hon. Members who have taken their seats in the House following the 1987 general election have the right to choose personal pension schemes in place of the existing parliamentary pension arrangements.

Mr. Wakeham: The Social Security Act 1986 enables members of an occupational pension scheme to choose an appropriate personal pension scheme rather than remain within their occupational scheme. In accordance with these provisions, all right hon. and hon. Members will have the right to choose a personal pension scheme in place of the parliamentary pension arrangements. As I confirmed in an answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 24 July 1987, at column 502, the parliamentary pension scheme, and in particular the anomalies raised by the passage of the Parliamentary and Other Pensions Bill, has been referred to the TSRB. It is my intention that the House will be given an opportunity to consider the TSRB's report before 1 July 1988, so that Members may make an informed decision about their choice of pension scheme.

ENVIRONMENT

Rating Reform

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his most recent estimate of the numbers of persons in England and Wales who fall under the following categories as defined in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (a) single pensioners and pensioner couples who are secondary tax units, (b) pensioners living in residential homes, nursing homes, hospitals and psychiatric units and (c) married women who are pensioners or who are married to pensioners and who are non-householders.

Mr. Howard: I refer my hon. Friend to annex C of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714), which sets out key facts about the numbers of households and tax units, and (so far as (b) is concerned) to my answer to him today.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of pensioners living in residential homes, nursing homes, hospitals and psychiatric units in England and Wales who will be exempt from the community charge.

Mr. Howard: It is not possible to provide a precise estimate of the number of pensioners in such institutions who would be exempt from the community charge. The statistics collected by the DHSS do not distinguish between those people who occupy such institutions as their sole or main residence—and would thus be exempt from the personal community charge—and those whose stay is temporary and who would remain liable at their main place of residence. The number is, however, likely to be in the region of 250,000-300,000.

Mr. Bevan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information has been made available on the Government's proposals for reform of the rating system.

Mr. Howard: The main proposals in our Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714), published in January 1986, were summarised in a factual pamphlet and short audio-visual presentation made available last year. Our firm proposals for legislation, which were outlined in the Queen's Speech, have now been summarised in an updated, factual leaflet which is being made available in response to inquiries. Copies have been placed in both Libraries and are available from the Vote Office. An explanatory video is also available on request from CFL Vision, Chalfont grove, Gerrards Cross, Bucks, SL9 8TN.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to amend section 79 of the Local Government Act 1972 so that following his proposed introduction of a national non-domestic rate, ownership or tenancy of property or place of work ceases to be qualifications for election and holding office as a member of a local authority.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987]: No.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will provide England only versions of figures F1 to F5 and J4 to J8 of Cmnd. 9714 "Paying for Local Government" to take account of (a) 1987-88 community charge figures, (b) the most recent tax-benefit model and (c) most recent other data;

(2) whether he will provide versions of figures F1 to F5 and J4 to J8 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government", showing seperately figures for London, metropolitan areas, and shire areas, to take account of (a) 1987-88 community charge figures, (b) the most recent tax-benefit model and (c) most recent other data;

(3) whether he will provide versions of figures J4, J5, J7 and J8 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government", showing separately figures for pensioner couples, to take account of (a) 1987-88 community charge figures, (b) the most recent tax-benefit model and (c) most recent other data;

(4) whether he will provide versions of figures J4 to J8 of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government", showing figures for households with net incomes of under £200 per week, to take account of (a) 1987-88 community charge figures, (b) the most recent tax-benefit model and (c) most recent other data;

(5) whether he will update annexes F and J of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government", particularly to take account of (a) 1987-88 community charge figures, (b) the most recent tax-benefit model and (c) most recent other data such as the family expenditure survey.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his replies, 21 October 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on Wednesday 21 October.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussion he has had with, or what representations he has received from the Audit Commission, about the likely effect of his reform of local government finance on the economy, efficiency and effectiveness of local authorities.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987]: The Audit Commission submitted informal comments on the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" Cmnd. 9714 in November 1986. Those comments were considered with the other comments on the Green Paper in reaching the decision, announced on 15 December 1986, that the Government intended to proceed with its proposals.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions his officials have had with the Audit Commission about any increase in external audit effort as a result of the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987]: None.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report those authorities budgeting to make contributions from their housing revenue account to the general rate fund in 1987-88, and express those contributions as a percentage of total expenditure and in terms of their effect on the published 1987-88 community charge calculations.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987]: Those authorities reporting contributions from housing revenue account to general rate fund are as follows, with the amounts of the transfers shown in cash, as amounts per adult and as percentages of "total expenditure". This last measure overstates the value of the contributions since "total expenditure" is expressed net of transfers to the rate fund from the housing revenue account. The illustrative community charge projections I have published for each of these authorities is reduced by the "per adult" amount of the reported contributions. I have already stressed that those illustrative figures are not to be taken as predictions of actual community charges.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority the number of dwellings where the rates paid are equal to the community charge per person, using the figures from the exemplifications placed in the Library since 11 June.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987]: The information available to me is for the numbers of domestic hereditaments in the following rateable value bands:

Less than £75
£75-£100
£100-£125
£125-£150
£150-£400
£400+

It is not, therefore, possible to say how many properties in each area have rate bills at or below the illustrative community charges for those areas.

National Heritage Memorial Fund

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the funding of tne National Heritage Memorial Fund.

Mr. Ridley: Since its creation in 1980 the National Heritage Memorial Fund has played a significant role in safeguarding our heritage by acting as a channel of finance for the preservation or acquisition of items of outstanding merit which might otherwise be lost to the nation. We have made this possible with grant-in-aid to the fund totalling some £83 million to date, including an initial endowment of £12·4 million.

To enable the fund to continue with its valuable work I propose to make an additional £20 million available to it in this financial year, subject to parliamentary approval. With these extra resources the trustees of the fund will be able to maintain their present level of activity whilst restoring the fund's reserves to their original value in real terms.

Annual support from my Department and the Office of Arts and Libraries will continue at the present level of £3 million.

Cash Limits

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits.

Mr. Ridley: Yes, I propose the following changes, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates.

The non-voted cash limit for 1987-88 for new towns (DOE/NT1) has been reduced by £160 million from minus £145·146 million to minus £305·146 million to take account of disposals of property which are higher than forecast. The cash limit for 1987-88 for class X, vote 4 will be increased from £86·447 million by £20 million to permit additional funding for the National Heritage Memorial Fund and by £0·25 million in respect of repairing storm damage and tree planting in the royal parks. The Department's running costs limits in respect of the latter expenditure will be increased by £0·25 million from £147·911 million to £148·161 million. The revised cash limit for 1987-88 for class X, vote 4 will be £106·697 million. The cash limit for 1987-88 for class X, vote 2 will be increased by £2·75 million to enable the Countryside Commission to undertake the expanded tree planting scheme announced in my statement of 21 October. The balance of £137 million will be surrendered to the reserve.

The cash limit for class X, vote 2 will also be increased by £60,000 to enable the litter initiative within UK 2000 to continue and to cover a new international subscription.

This increase will be offset by a reduction of £60,000 in the cash limit for class X, vote 5 due to slippage on research programmes. At the same time the cash limit for class X, vote 5 will be increased by a token £1,000 to enable the chairman of the Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council to be remunerated for his services. The revised cash limit for class X, vote 2, taking account of all changes, will br £199·318 million. The revised cash limit for class X, vote 5, taking account of all changes, will be £154·430 million.

Children's Play

Mr. Rathbone asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to report the Government's plan for Children's Play following dissolution of Play Board.

Mr. Moynihan: As I announced on 30 September, the Sports Council has agreed to accept responsibility for providing a national focus for the promotion and development of Children's Play. The council will be establishing a separate management committee to include representatives from the local authority associations and relevant national organisations concerned with children's play, to oversee this work.

Housing Support

Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown of the average housing support figures for (a) pensioners (head of household) and (b) others in the following categories (i) the public rented housing sector, (ii) home owners with a mortgage or other loan and (iii) home owners owning outright; and if he will further subdivide the resulting figures between rent rebates, rate rebates, housing subsidy and income tax relief on mortgage interest.

Mr. Waldegrave: Estimates of Government housing support in 1985, on the basis described for 1984 in pages 108 to 113 of Economic Trends, No. 393 are as follows:

Average housing support by type of household and tenure type: 1985

[2] Includes tenants of local authorities, new town corporations, the Scottish Special Housing Association, Northern Ireland Housing Executive and housing associations.

[3] Includes rent element of housing benefit supplement.

[4] Includes rates element of housing benefit supplement.

[5] Housing subsidy is current expenditure less income on the housing revenue accounts of local authorities, and grants paid to the rest of the public sector.

[6] At the basic rate only. Includes relief on mortgage endowment and mortgage protection policies.

Note:

These figures do not include mortgage interest tax relief at rates in excess of the basic rate or supplementary benefit assistance with mortgage interest payments. Sound estimates for pensioner and non-pensioner households separately are not available, but over all owner occupiers with mortgages, the average amounts in 1985 are estimated at about £30 and £20, respectively.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what central Government grants owed to the former Greater London council and the Inner London education authority are still outstanding.

Mr. Chope: A wide variety of Exchequer grants were payable to the Greater London council and are payable to the Inner London education authority. In the process of closing the GLC's accounts the London residuary body has estimated the amounts of grants due. In some cases these entitlements and arrangements for payment are the subject of discussion between the LRB and the respective Government Departments. In others, outstanding amounts do not become payable until audited claims have been received or Parliament's approval has been given. Exchequer grants to the ILEA for past years are subject to final revisions according to arrangements which vary from case to case.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many claims for redundancy payments or compensation from former employees of the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils have yet to be settled in full.

Mr. Chope: I understand that final payments are still outstanding in only two of over 6,000 claims for redundancy payments or compensation from former employees of the GLC and MCCs. In both cases interim payments have been made.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which newspapers were used by the London residuary body to give public notice of the 1985-86 accounts and related document.

Mr. Chope: The Daily Telegraph and The London Evening Standard were used to give notice of the public inspection period for both the Greater London council's 1985-86 accounts and the London residuary body's 1985-86 annual report and accounts.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information he has on the current whereabouts of the items of historical and traditional association catalogued by the Greater London council and transferred to the London residuary body.

Mr. Chope: I understand that items in possession of the LRB are located in County Hall, in Kenwood House and in secure storage. Items forming part of the Crystal Palace collection have been transferred to the London borough of Bromley.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the current number of residential mortgages remaining with the London residuary body.

Mr. Chope: At the end of September 32,802 residential mortgages remained with the LRB.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Home Office, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Manpower Services Commission have now settled their outstanding accounts with the London residuary body.

Mr. Chope: These are matters for the Home Office, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Employment.

Storm Damage

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of trees felled in London by the storm on the morning of 16 October.

Mr. Moynihan: Damage has been extensive. Information is readily available only for the royal parks, where approximately 3,000 trees were blown down in the storm and of the order of a further thousand have been so severely damaged that they have to be felled.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the damage in London caused by the storm on the morning of 16 October.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer to my right hon. Friend's statement yesterday on the storm damage on 16 October. It is too early to give estimates of the costs and extent of the damage generally.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have taken place between his Department and London local authorities concerning the consequences of the storm on the morning of 16 October.

Mr. Chope: I refer to my right hon. Friend's statement yesterday afternoon on the storm damage on 16 October. My right hon. Friend has replied to the letter from the chairman of the Association of London Authorities.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources he intends to make available to London local authorities to deal with the consequences of the storm on the morning of 16 October.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the statement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State yesterday.

Residuary Bodies

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the salaries of chairmen and members of each of the residuary bodies (a) currently and (b) on appointment.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

Remuneration is subject to abatement, if applicable, in respect of public sector pension received.

Council House Sales

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his estimates of the present number of people who will be displaced from council houses as a result of the sale of estates, who do not have enough income to buy their own homes, will not be able to pay the rents demanded by private landlords, and are unable to obtain housing benefits.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. The Government's policies are aimed at increasing the supply of housing available at affordable rents, and at widening the choices open to council tenants.

Housebuilding

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses were built by the public sector for each year since 1980; and how many were built each year from 1973 to 1979.

Mr. Waldegrave: The numbers of dwelling completions in the United Kingdom in the years 1976 to 1986 appear in table 6.1(f) of "Housing and Construction Statistics, 1976-1986" and those for 1973-1975 in the corresponding table of the 1973-1983 edition. Copies are available in the Library.

Whale Products

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for what purposes whale products are imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: Imports of whale products are normally permitted only for personal or scientific purposes involving no commercial trade.

Common Land

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to introduce legislation to remedy the problems arising from the misregistration of property as common land.

Mr. Moynihan [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987]: This is one of a series of recommendations contained in the report of the Common Land Forum, which was published by the Countryside Commission in September 1986. My right hon. Friend announced on 29 January 1987 that the Government accept the case for legislation based broadly on the forum's report and intends to introduce a comprehensive Commons Bill at a suitable opportunity when parliamentary time permits.

Storm Damage

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the additional expense that will be incurred by local councils in consequence of the 15-16 October hurricane; and if Her Majesty's Government will offer any assistance towards these costs.

Mr. Ridley: No such estimate is yet available, but I announced to the House on Wednesday 21 October a package of measures designed to help local authorities affected by storm damage on 15-16 October.

In addition, I can confirm that the Government accept that those authorities will now be using up the funds they have set aside for contingencies. If there is any further emergency to which the Bellwin rules are applied in this financial year, we will add in the cost of the current emergency work in calculating whether authorities qualify for special grant aid. And we will ensure that there is not loss of rate support grant on spending above the threshold. This will apply to all authorities affected by the English storm whether or not they qualify for grant on this occasion.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

North Molton Primary School

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, if he will visit north Devon; and if he will include North Molton primary school in his itinerary to discuss matters relating to primary education.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to visit north Devon.

Education Reform

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will deposit the analysis of the responses to his consultation documents being prepared for him in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No. We do not intend to issue summaries of all the responses received, although I do not at this stage rule out the possibility of doing so in relation to some aspects of the consultation.

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will arrange for copies of all responses to his consultation documents to be deposited in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) gave to the Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 21 October 1987.

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing each of the consultation documents published by him in respect of the forthcoming Education Bill, and in respect of each (a) the date of publication, (b) the closing date for receipt of responses, (c) the number issued of each document and (d) the number of responses from: (i) individuals and (ii) bodies and institutions.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information is as follows:

DEFENCE

Service Bases (Nuclear Reactors)

Mr. Morley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about plans by the United States Defence Department to locate mini nuclear power reactors at Royal Air Force and Royal Navy bases in the United Kingdom currently loaned to the United States; what licensing procedures exist to permit the stationing of such nuclear reactors at land military bases in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We are not aware that such plans exist or are being developed by any agency of the United States Government. I understand that the United States air force was studying a concept under the title of "Multi-megawatt Terrestrial Power Plant Program" for emergency generating capability in the event of disruption of commercial supplies by natural disaster, but the programme was cancelled by the Secretary of the Air Force.

Overseas Territories

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the defence costs attributable to defending the following remaining British dependent territories (a) Hong Kong, (b) Pitcairn, (c) Bermuda, (d) Anguilla, (e) British Antarctic Territory, (f) British Indian Ocean Territory, (g) British Virgin Islands, (h) Cayman Islands, (i) Falkland Islands, (j) Gibraltar, (k) Montserrat, (l) St. Helena and Dependencies, (m) South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands, and (n) the Turks and Caicos Islands.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Those British dependent territories for which there are directly attributable defence costs are as follows:

1987-88 Estimated defence cost

	£ million
Hong Kong	55
British Indian Ocean Territory (Diego Garcia)	1
Falkland Islands (including South Georgia)	141
Gibraltar	79

We do not maintain forces exclusively for operations in the other dependencies and costs are not separately identified.

Training Centre, Arkansas

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist to send British military personnel to the joint readiness training centre at Fort Chaffee, Arkansas.

Mr. Ian Stewart: One officer is currently at Fort Chaffee as a liaison officer between the British and United States army training organisations. There are no plans at present to send any other personnel.

Dowty Group

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been paid back to his Department by the Dowty Group in respect of alleged fraud over defence contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department's dealings with individual companies are subject to commercial confidentiality.

Contracts (Overcharging)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been recovered by his Department from companies found to be overcharging on contract work in each year from 1979 to date.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since 1979, the following refunds have been made by contractors following a post costing review of contract prices:

Year	£ million
1979	3·1
1980	0·3
1981	0·3
1982	1·8
1983	1·1
1984	14·5
1985	3·9
1986	2·2

Post costing is undertaken selectively to establish the outturn costs of a contract compared with the costs on which the contract price was based. If the analysis of the post costing reveals a lack of equality of information at the time the price was fixed there would be grounds for seeking a refund from the contractor. Such post costing reviews are only necessary for contracts placed non-competitively, the number of which we aim to reduce.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Sales

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria Her Majesty's Government apply to distinguish between weapons and equipment necessary for national defence and those which could be used for internal repression by countries under repressive regimes.

Mr. Mellor: Our policy is not to allow the export of defence equipment likely to be used for internal repression or to violate human rights. All exports of defence equipment are subject to strict licensing procedures. In considering applications for licences we look at each on its merits, and the human rights record of the country concerned would be one factor taken into account when deciding whether or not to grant a licence.

South Africa

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what British diplomatic support will be given to the United Kingdom-South Africa Trade Association visit to South Africa in November.

Mrs. Chalker: In keeping with our international undertakings, the United Kingdom-South Africa Trade Association mission is not receiving any financial support from us. Within those constraints we continue to provide certain limited services to British business visitors to South Africa, including members of the UKSATA mission, such as advice about the market and local contacts.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the annual cost of maintaining a British diplomatic presence in South Africa in each of the last five financial years; and what has been the total number of staff employed in each of those years.

Mr. Eggar: The annual cost in each of the last five years of maintaining a British diplomatic presence in South Africa is shown, together with the numbers of staff employed.

	£ million	Staff numbers		Total
		United Kingdom based	Locally engaged
1983	3·0	47	105	152
1984	3·2	46	99	145
1985	2·8	46	99	145
1986	3·5	45	103	148

Guatemala Accord

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will instruct Her Majesty's ambassadors in Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala to hold urgent talks with the Governments in those countries aimed at establishing what practical steps Britain could take to help the implementation of the Guatemala accord of August;

(2) if he will instruct the ambassador to Nicaragua to have talks with President Ortega of Nicaragua to discuss practical help which the United Kingdom can offer to Nicaragua in her efforts to support the accord of 27 August;

(3) if he will give public and practical support to the Guatemala accord by the five Presidents of Central American republics.

Mr. Eggar: We warmly welcomed the Guatemala peace agreement and pledged our continued support for the efforts of the central Americans to achieve a lasting solution to the region's problems. We, together with our community partners, established a formal political dialogue with the Governments of central America in 1984. As a result, there have been three meetings at ministerial level, and regular contact at ambassadorial level. Most recently, at our suggestion, a meeting was held in New York in September between representatives of the European Community and central American Governments to discuss implementation of the Guatemala accord.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Population Statistics

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the estimated numbers of women aged 15 to 44 years resident in each county and county borough (pre-1974 boundaries) in Northern Ireland in mid-1986.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available.

St. Mary's and St. Joseph's Training College

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the financial allocation annually in each of the last three years for pastoral care to St. Mary's and St. Joseph's training college, Belfast.

Dr. Mawhinney: No such allocation has been made.

Health Boards

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to whom the area manager of a health board is responsible; and what scrutiny is made of his actions.

Mr. Needham: The general manager of a health and social services board is directly accountable to the board as his employer. He is also accountable on behalf of the board for the management of its funds to the permanent secretary of the Department of Health and Social Services in his role as accounting officer responsible to Parliament.

A number of key objectives are determined each year by the board for the general manager and his performance in meeting those objectives is assessed by the chairman acting for the board and by the permanent secretary to ensure equity and consistency between boards.

In addition, the board's financial affairs, and their administration by its staff, are subject to scrutiny by the auditors appointed by the Department of Health and Social Services and by the Northern Ireland Audit Office.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the bonus payments paid to the area manager of the Northern health board in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Needham: It is the Government's policy not to disclose personal information of this kind.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the per capita revenue allocation for the Southern, Western and Northern boards for the next five to 10 years.

Mr. Needham: The actual level of resources available for the health and personal social services is decided annually through the public expenditure survey and the Secretary of State's decisions in allocating the Northern Ireland block. It is not possible therefore to identify the boards' revenue allocations and the consequent per capita funding over the next five to 10 years. However, the recently published regional strategy for the "Northern Ireland Health and Personal Social Services 1987-1992", a copy of which has been placed in the Library, is based on the assumption that over the period to 1992 the total level of resources across the Province will remain steady in real terms, with an enhancement for demographic pressures, estimated at 0·9 per cent. per year.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has the total capital allocation been to each area health board in Northen Ireland since the inception of the health boards in 1973.

Mr. Needham: The information covering the period 1 October 1973 to 31 March 1987 is as follows:

	£ million
Northern Board	19·6
Southern Board	17·3
Eastern Board	66·4
Western Board	18·0

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total revenue allocation to each area health board in Northern Ireland since 1973.

Mr. Needham: The information covering the period 1 October 1973 to 31 March 1987 is as follows:

	£ million
Northern Board	711
Southern Board	674
Eastern Board	2,399
Western Board	655

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the revenue allocation to the Eastern health board for its regional services.

Mr. Needham: It is not possible to define accurately what constitutes regional medical services because of medical advances and changing clinical practices. In addition, many regional services are provided at the major teaching hospitals and their costs cannot be identified separately.

Police Secondments

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many officers from police forces in England, Wales and Scotland were seconded to duties in Northern Ireland in each of the past three years.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Terrorism

Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) for how many of the 178 terrorist killings in Fermanagh and South Tyrone between 9 February 1971 and 6 October 1986 anyone had been made amenable for murder by 27 October 1986, and if he will make a statement;

(2) if anyone has been made amenable since 27 October 1986 for each of the terrorist murders in Fermanagh and South Tyrone unsolved at that time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987, c 761]: By 27 October 1986 the RUC had obtained convictions for offences in relation to 36 of these killings. None has been obtained since then.

We shall not cease in our endeavours to bring these evil men to justice.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many suspensions of unemployment benefit pending inquiries into availability for employment were made (a) in May 1980 and (b) in the most recent month for which figures are available;

(2) how many refusals to pay unemployment benefit due to non-availability for employment were made (a) in May 1980 and (b) in the most recent month for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: There are no records maintained to show the number of suspensions of unemployment benefit on the question of availability for employment. Statistics on the number of disallowances of unemployment on the same grounds are maintained, but are not compiled on a monthly basis. However, for the last quarter of 1980 the monthly average was 4,000, and for the last quarter of 1986 the monthly average over 12,000.

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy on seeking the recovery of an overpayment of unemployment benefit where a question arises of a person's availability for work for a period during which he or she has been in receipt of unemployment benefit.

Mr. Lee: An overpayment of unemployment benefit is recoverable by the Secretary of State only where the independent adjudicating authorities have determined that the overpayment has been obtained by misrepresentation of, or failure to disclose, a material fact (Social Security Act 1986, section 53 (1)). It is the Secretary of State's normal policy to seek recovery in such cases.

Restart Programme

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current success rate on the restart programme; and how many people find full-time permanent jobs within one month of their restart interview (a) nationally and (b) in Oxfordshire.

Mr. Cope: Between 9 April and 25 September 1987, 1,406,859 people had been called for a restart interview, of whom 1,021,700 had been interviewed.

The aim of restart interviews is to help unemployed people into employment by selecting the best way open to them from the wide range of employment, training and job search opportunities available. Around nine out of 10 of those interviewed are made offers that might lead to employment, and 70 per cent. of those interviewed agreed at their restart interview to pursue the offer made to them. We do not know how many ultimately went into full-time employment.

Between 9 April and 25 September 1987, 15,331 people in the Berks. and Oxon. area had been called for an interview, of whom 10,811 had been interviewed. Seventy-one per cent. of the people interviewed agreed to pursue the offer made to them at their restart interview.

Job Clubs

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average time spent by unemployed people in job clubs; and what are the benefit consequences of leaving the job club without having secured employment.

Mr. Lee: The average length of time spent in a job club by unemployed people is six weeks. Participants are encouraged to stay until they find a job, but if they leave before doing so their benefit entitlement is not affected.

In the current financial year to the end of August 1987 39,018 people passed through job clubs. Of these, 21,277 (54·5 per cent) found work and a further 5,025 (13 per cent.) took up a place on the community programme, a training scheme or the enterprise allowance scheme.

Coal Industry

Mr. Illsley asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many major injury accidents to persons on British Coal Corporation's colliery books in 1986-87, reported under the RIDDOR regulations, also satisfied the criteria for reporting under the previous NADOR regulations.

Mr. Cope: There were 982 major injury accidents in 1986-87 in coal mines. Of those, it is estimated that 687 would have been reportable under the previous NADOR regulations.

Railway Locomotives

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the numbers employed in the United Kingdom in the construction of railway locomotives and their component equipment, including engines.

Mr. Lee: In August 1987 there were an estimated 14,000 employees in employment in the railway and tramway vehicles industry (activity heading 3620 of the 1980 standard industrial classification) in Great Britain. The figure includes employees engaged in the manufacture of major sub-assemblies and the manufacture and repair of railway and tramway rolling stock.

The estimate is subject to considerable potential estimation error due to the relatively small number of employees in the industry.

Figures for the United Kingdom are not available.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if from April 1988, under regulation 18(1) as calculated under regulation 16 and schedule 2 to the draft housing benefit regulations, housing benefit will be withdrawn from pensioners who are hospital in-patients for a period exceeding six weeks.

Mr. Portillo: The amount of housing benefit which a pensioner receives after he has been in hospital for more than six weeks will continue to depend on his income and the amount of eligible rent or rates he has to pay. For example, a pensioner who continues to receive income support will continue to receive maximum help with both rent and rates. Pensioners not on income support will be reassessed for housing benefit using a reduced applicable amount after six weeks in hospital, as part of the alignment of social security benefit rules. However, this will not necessarily mean housing benefit is reduced or withdrawn, and any downrating of other social security benefits they may be receiving will also be taken into account. Housing benefit could be withdrawn if the local authority decides in accordance with regulation 5(8) that the claimant does not intend to return home, or if that part of the dwelling which he normally occupies has been let or sub-let during his absence.

Girocheques

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what procedures are followed when claimants of supplementary benefit and unemployment benefit report that they have not received the Girocheque which has been sent to them; what are the average waiting times for replacement Girocheques in such cases in England and Wales as a whole, North London region and South London; and how the delays experienced in his Department's Hackney office and in unemployment benefit offices in Hackney compare with the national and regional figures.

Mr. Portillo: Claimants reporting non receipt of supplementary benefit Girocheques are requested to call at the local office to give details of the circumstances of non receipt and to sign an undertaking to return the Girocheque should it subsequently arrive. Immediate replacements are given if appropriate. If not, appropriate consideration of replacement is deferred until a search is made to establish if the original Girocheque has been cashed.

No local or central records are held of average waiting times for replacement Girocheques and to obtain such records would incur disproportionate cost.

Procedures for unemployment benefit Girocheques are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Benefits

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the current national average waiting times for (a) single payments under the supplementary benefit scheme, (b) new claims for supplementary benefit, (c) housing benefit, (d) family income supplement and (e) invalid care allowance.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information is not available on the average clearance time for decisions on single payment or housing benefit claims. Figures for the other benefits are shown in the table following. Supplementary benefit figures are for the four weeks ending 22 September.

Figures for family income supplement and invalid care allowance were obtained by a special count of claims up to 24 August.

	Clearance time
Supplementary Benefit	6 days
Family Income Supplement	14 days
Invalid Care Allowance	12·4 weeks

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current estimate for unclaimed benefit nationally; and how this is divided between different benefits.

Mr. Scott: For the major contributory benefits (such as retirement pension, widow's benefit, unemployment benefit) and child benefit virtually all those eligible are thought to claim their entitlement. Eligibility is difficult to establish for some of the non-contributory benefits, particularly disability benefits such as mobility allowance and attendance allowance.

For one-parent benefit, the latest estimate suggests that in 1984 about £5 million out of a possible £125 million was unclaimed by single parents who stood to gain. Available estimates also suggest that in 1983, supplementary benefit recipients claimed £4,590 million whilst others who were probably eligible did not claim around £570 million. Housing benefit take-up estimates suggest that in 1984 entitled recipients claimed £3,820 million and that £500 million was unclaimed. Estimates for family income supplement spanning 1983 and 1984 suggest that, on an annual basis, employees in employment received £105 million whilst a further £55 million could have been claimed.

Strictly, it is inappropriate to add up the figures listed above because they relate to different years. However, a broad annual estimate based on these years suggests that roughly £8·5 billion in income-related benefits was claimed whilst about £1 billion was unclaimed.

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to list addresses of local advice centres on letters sent by his Department refusing benefit.

Mr. Portillo: It is not the Department's policy to list addresses of local advice centres on letters sent refusing benefits because we do not believe this is warranted. But we have decided that it is desirable for appellants to social security tribunals to be provided with the names and addresses of local agencies who may be willing to represent them at their appeal tribunal, as I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 24 July 1987, at column 710. Procedural arrangements to implement these changes are in hand.

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many payments under regulation 30 of the supplementary benefit single payments regulations were made (a) in May 1980 and (b) in the most recent month for which figures are available.

Mr. Portillo: Supplementary Benefits (Single Payments) Regulation 30 did not take effect until November 1980. For the four weeks ending 23 December 1980, the first four-week period during which the legislation was current, 157 payments were made under Regulation 30, amounting to £6,689.

For the four weeks ending 22 September 1987, the most recent period for which figures are available, 4,139 payments were made, amounting to £387,099.

Social Fund

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services who will comprise the review panels on the social fund.

Mr. Scott: The social fund has a two-tier review process. First, an applicant who is dissatisfied with the decision on his application may apply to the social fund officer in the DHSS local office for a review of that decision. If the social fund officer is unable to change the decision in favour of the applicant the review will always be determined by an assistant manager in the local office. If the applicant remains dissatisfied he will be able to apply for a further review by an independent social fund inspector based outside the local office. The appointment and management of social fund inspectors will be a matter for the independent social fund commissioner who has yet to be appointed.

Mortgage Defaults

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people on supplementary benefit defaulted on their mortgage repayments (a) in May 1980 and (b) in the most recent month for which figures are available.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available.

Claimant Advisers

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how cases will be referred to the new claimant advisers by supplementary benefit offices.

Mr. Portillo: The supplementary benefit adjudiction officer sends a form to the claimant adviser notifying him of unemployed claimants who appear from their history on benefit to need help in finding work.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of social security tribunals are determined in favour of the claimant; and what is the claimant success rate at social security appeal tribunals where the claimant (a) has a representative and (b) has no representative.

Mr. Portillo: Of the 125,838 appeals heard during 1986, 31,675 (25·2 per cent.) were decided in the claimant's favour; a representative attended at 27,282 hearings where the success rate for the claimant was 47·8 per cent.; the success rate of unrepresented appeals was 18·9 per cent., although this figure includes 41,539 hearings where the claimant attended (with a success rate of 32 per cent.) and 57,017 hearings where neither the claimant nor a representative was present (with a success rate of 9·4 per cent.).

Social Security Act

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the levels of premiums under the new Social Security Act will be set.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend will be making an announcement shortly.

Fraud Officers

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many fraud officers were employed in his Department (a) in May 1980 and (b) in the most recent month for which figures are available.

Mr. Portillo: Precise figures are not available but it is possible to calculate the amount of staff time employed on fraud work in the Department. In May 1980 the equivalent of 2,350 full-time staff were employed on fraud-related work, mainly in local offices, and in September 1987 the figure had risen to 2,920. The latter figure includes 500 additional staff for the extra effort against benefit fraud introduced in 1986.

Single Parents

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the average expenses claimed by single parents doing part-time jobs whilst claiming supplementary benefit, including child care and transport expenses, in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information is not collected about supplementary benefit claimant's work-related expenses. Some analysis of lone parents' work expenses is contained in the report of a study[1] of the tapered earnings disregard for lone parents, which was commissioned by the Department and carried out by the social policy research unit of the university of York in 1982. A copy of the report is in the Library.

[1] Lone Mothers, Paid Work and Social Security: Occasional Paper on Social Administration 77.

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many lone parents are currently affected by the requirement in the supplementary benefit regulations that they must register as available for full-time work once all their children reach the age of 16 years, whether or not those children are still at school; and if he will supply this information in respect of (a) London north region, (b) London south region and (c) England and Wales as a whole.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of board and lodging claimants in Oxfordshire have their full lodging costs met by his Department; and, of those who do not have their expenses fully met, what is the average shortfall.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Health Cuts (Oldham)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out for each year since 1982, what changes have been made in the National Health Service budget by Oldham district health authority in order to achieve savings; how much was saved each year by each of these changes; by how much staffing has been cut in each year as a result of each of these changes, and in what grades; and what plans there are for the current year in each of these respects.

Mr. Newton: On the basis of provisional figures for 1986-87 Oldham health authority's expenditure has risen since 1982-83 by 26·2 per cent., or nearly 6 per cent. in real terms. Between 1982 and 1986 the number of front line staff rose by nearly 7 per cent. These increases, together with an improved use of resources which is greatly to the credit of management and staff, made possible increases of 14 per cent. in the number of in-patient cases treated, 92 per cent. in day cases, 14 per cent. in out patient attendances and 22 per cent. in day attendances.

It is the responsibility of the Oldham health authority to manage its budget allocation to meet its policy objectives and maximise the effectiveness and efficiency with which its resources are used for the benefit of patients. The hon. Member may, therefore, wish to approach the chairman of the Oldham health authority for details of changes in services, the levels of activity to which they relate and any redeployment of moneys released by such changes.

Private Contractors

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been spent in each of the past five years by his Department on work undertaken by contractors, showing what work is undertaken and in each case whether it was previously undertaken by permanent staff.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has some 1,360 budget holders who have delegated responsibility for getting work done within their allocated budget and for obtaining value for money. For some tasks this would involve the use of contractors. The detailed information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Wray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether Her Majesty's Government will support Danish and other European Community Government proposals for mandatory aid to retirement pensioners and other needy social groups during severe weather conditions.

Mr. Portillo: The Government already provide help when it is very cold through the supplementary benefit exceptionally cold weather scheme. Last winter, we estimate that over 950,000 people received help, at a benefit cost of £10·2 million. Any proposals from the European Community would be considered on their merits.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Surpluses

3. Mr. Hargreaves asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will next meet the National Farmers Union to discuss the question of food surpluses.

Mr. MacGregor: I meet members of the National Farmers Union frequently to discuss agricultural issues.

Alternative Land Use

5. Mr. Stevens asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had from the Tenant Farmers Association regarding compensation to tenants when they have lost land to alternative uses.

Mr. Gummer: In a recent letter to my right hon. Friend the Tenant Farmers Association has called for increased compensation for tenants when land goes for development. I have also received representation from the Country Landowners Association expressing a contrary view.

32. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about his plans for additional grants for planting trees on agricultural land.

Mr. Gummer: We have received many responses to the consultation document "Farm Woodland Scheme" issued earlier this year and hope to announce our intentions on the scheme to Parliament shortly.

Beef Industry

15. Sir John Farr asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his future plans for the beef premium scheme.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The reform of the beef regime negotiated last December during the British presidency of the European Community provided for the beef variable premium to continue for two years. The arrangements to apply in 1989 and beyond will be for consideration next year. Meanwhile, beef producers are benefiting from a substantial devaluation of the green pound and a 35 per cent. increase in the suckler cow premium.

17. Mr. Temple-Morris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to meet the President of the National Farmers Union to discuss the beef industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend the Minister meets the President of the National Farmers Union frequently and discusses the beef sector when appropriate.

Agriculture Industry

16. Mr. Allen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to establish an independent national agricultural support system to replace the common agricultural policy in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: No. The treaty of Rome provides for a common agricultural policy. The Government's approach is to work with our partners for its reform, to bring it into closer touch with market realities, and to reduce surpluses and their associated budgetary costs.

18. Mr. Baldry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to meet leaders of the agriculture industry in the near future.

Mr. MacGregor: I have frequent meetings with leaders of the agriculture industry.

34. Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will next meet the President of the National Farmers Union to discuss the sheep sector of the agriculture industry.

Mr. MacGregor: I maintain regular contacts with the President of the NFU on a wide range of issues, including the sheepmeat sector.

Cereals

20. Mr. John Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the reduction of cereal surpluses.

Mr. Gummer: I shall continue to pursue a policy of bringing cereals production more into line with demand by continuing price restraint, including through the application of automatic stabilisers, supporting measures to make intervention a safety net rather than an alternative market outlet and promoting the diversion of land out of cereals.

Food Policy

21. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning his priorities with respect to food policy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Our priority is to ensure that a plentiful supply of wholesome food of sound quality and adequate variety is available to the consumer at competitive prices. To this end we shall continue to encourage the development of an efficient and innovative food and drink industry whilst maintaining a comprehensive range of legislation controlling the safety, quality and labelling of food.

Farm Incomes

22. Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest assessment of the prospects for farm incomes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is too early to provide an assessment 1987, but as soon as we have any indication of the position we will make this known.

Common Agricultural Policy

19. Mr. Marlow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on Government policy with regard to the repatriation to individual countries of some financial aspects of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government's prime objective is to achieve radical reform of the common agricultural policy which will deal with surpluses and their costs. All our efforts have been directed at bringing this about.

Milk Quota Leasing

24. Mr. Nicholas Bennett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on milk quota leasing.

Mr. MacGregor: The Council of Ministers has now formally adopted a regulation allowing the operation of quota leasing. I am very pleased we have succeeded in securing a measure of flexibility that I know is of considerable importance to many dairy farmers.

Outgoers Scheme

25. Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the working of the milk producers outgoers scheme.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The response to both the schemes which opened on 10 June has been very limited. This no doubt reflects the profitability of milk production and our flexible transfer arrangements, which enable British farmers who want to reduce their production to dispose of quota relatively easily. As previously announced, the national scheme closed on 16 October, and the community scheme will close at the end of the month.

Milk Marketing Board

26. Mr. Barry Field asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any representations from the Milk Marketing Board seeking powers to enable it to increase the number of non-elected directors.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No.

Food Aid

27. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider repeating the free distribution of dairy products to those in need.

Mr. Gummer: The Commission has proposed to the Council of Ministers a permanent free food scheme to start in 1988, providing for distribution of products held in intervention stores to the most needy. The Council has not yet taken a decision. Meanwhile, I am exploring with charities the scope which there would be for release under the proposed arrangements of butter and beef from intervention stores in the United Kingdom.

Dairy Farmers

28. Mr. Speller asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will visit north Devon to meet dairy farmers.

Mr. MacGregor: I have no plans at present to do so, but my right hon. Friend the Minister of State met dairy farmers on a visit to the region earlier this month.

Agricultural Land

29. Mr. Chapman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's work to improve the objectivity of agricultural land classifications.

Mr. Gummer: My Department is now reaching the final stages of its consultations with the soil survey and land research centre on the improved agricultural land classification system. We plan shortly to consult external practitioners with a view to introducing the revised system early in 1988.

Dairy Industry

30. Mr. Robert G. Hughes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications of the 1987 harvest for the profitability of surburban dairy farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: New crop supplies of feed grains should exceed domestic demand again this season, despite the effects of the wet harvest. Support prices are lower than last season and currently ex-farm prices are below the level of a year ago. However, it is too early to say how feed grain price movements over the season as a whole will affect the profitability of dairy farmers, and I am not aware of any data that refer specifically to those farming in the suburbs.

Mr. Latham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the current problems of milk producers.

Mr. MacGregor: Although operating under the quota regime has posed serious problems for some producers, the dairy industry as a whole can look forward with more confidence following the measures agreed by the Council last December which should bring about a much better relationship between supply and demand. Average dairy farm income in England and Wales increased significantly in real terms in each of the last two years and is expected to increase further during the current year.

Harvest Yield

31. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the yield of the harvest.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department currently estimates the 1987 cereals harvest in the United Kingdom to be 22 million tonnes.

Fish Farming

33. Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will bring forward regulations for fish farming.

Mr. Gummer: A statutory framework for the regulation of fish farming already exists. This framework involves various controls over the setting up of farms, water abstraction and discharge, and fish movements. The Government intend to add to these controls by extending the requirement for water abstraction licensing by water authorities to fish farms producing fish for the table.

Animal Welfare

14. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to deal with animal welfare; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are continuing to take steps to improve the welfare of farm animals, including codes and regulations on various aspects of welfare.

23. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received this year about the recommendations made by the Farm Animal Welfare Council.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department normally consults widely on the recommendations of the Farm Animal Welfare Council. This year I have received representations on the revised sheep code and the council's interim statement on new welfare regulations.

Milk Quotas

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farms in the United Kingdom have milk quotas of (a) over 2 million litres, (b) between 750,000 and 1,999,999 litres, (c) between 500,000 and 749,999 litres, (d) between 200,000 and 299,999 litres, (e) between 100,000 and 199,999 litres, and (f) less than 100,000 litres.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The allocation of quota by size band in the United Kingdom is shown in the following table. Records are maintained for quota holders on the basis of entire holdings, which may comprise more than one farm.

Size group Litres	Number of producers
Under 100,000	10,862
100,000 to 199,999	11,672
200,000 to 299,999	8,637
300,000 to 499,999	9,805
500,000 to 749,999	4,887
750,000 to 1,999,999	2,782
Over 2 million	185

Intervention Stores

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his answer of 13 July, Official Report, column 351, he will provide a breakdown of the storage and related costs of maintaining European Economic Community food intervention stores.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A breakdown of United Kingdom storage and related costs by intervention commodity is set out. Records are not kept in a form which enables a breakdown by type of cost to be readily extracted.

£'000

	Cereals	Butter	SMP	Beef	Total
1983-84	30,573	9,078	3,766	526	48,623
1984-85	30,389	12,391	2,323	12,552	57,655
1985-86	81,366	16,206	880	26,143	124,595
1986-87	79,351	22,614	825	25,842	128,632

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details by type and quantity of foodstuffs dumped as waste or used as animal feed intervention stores in each of the past five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Over the five years 1982 to 1986, 278,612 tonnes of skimmed milk powder were sold out of intervention for manufacture into animal feed. Sales of intervention grain of feed quality totalled 5·5 million tonnes. For the period 1982 to 1985 no butter was sold for animal feed, but 14,081 tonnes were sold in 1986.

Over the five years 1982 to 1986 2,100 tonnes of cereals damaged in store had to be dumped. There was no dumping of intervention beef and destruction of skimmed milk powder and butter over this period involved only extremely small quantities.

Sharks

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many basking sharks were taken from British territorial waters in each of the past five years; which countries took them; for what purposes; what is the estimated population of basking sharks in British waters; and if he will consider a total ban on their being fished.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Horticultural Marketing Inspectorate

35. Mr. Jack asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will commission an annual report on the work of the horticultural marketing inspectorate.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no plans to commission an annual report on the work of the horticultural marketing inspectorate. Its work is closely monitored within my Department including through the MINIM system. Figures showing the number of inspections and resulting action taken by the Inspectorate are published quarterly by the Commission of the European Communities and can be obtained from its London information office at 8 Storey's Gate.

Sea Defences

Mr. David Porter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will clarify the new arrangements for local authorities' funding of non-emergency sea defence work; if he will make a statement about sea defences; and if he will make it his policy to treat sea defence as a national responsibility, rather than a coastal authority matter.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987]: I am currently considering as the hon. Member is aware, the allocation between local authorities of the global capital sum available for this work and the Department will inform local authorities of the decision as soon as possible.

Proposals for coastal works are a long-standing local authority responsibility in view of their considerable local importance. When views were last canvassed on this—in 1985 — the strongly-held view of the authorities concerned remained that this responsibility should be left in local hands. The Government do, of course, make a significant contribution to the funding of capital work through a very high rate of grant, most authorities qualifying for the maximum rate of 70 per cent.

ENVIRONMENT

Poll Tax

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received regarding the introduction of a poll tax; and if he will indicate the percentage in favour of, and the percentage against, such a change.

Mr. Howard: A summary of responses received by my Department before 31 October last, when the consultation 53period on the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) ended, was placed in the Library on 15 December 1986. One thousand two hundred and seventeen responses were received. Though opinions varied, more than twice as many people wanted to abolish domestic rates as wanted to keep them. The community charge received considerably greater support than any other replacement for the rates. We continue to receive representation about specific aspects of our proposals as well as requests for further information.

Training Programmes (London Docklands Development Corporation)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each training programme in, or related to, the area of the London Docklands Development Corporation, the contribution of that corporation to each, the numbers of persons recruited to and leaving each course, and the numbers obtaining full time employment respectively, each to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Trippier: The best information available to date on training initiatives in docklands to which the London Docklands Development Corporation has directly contributed is as follows:

(a) Docklands New Technology Centre (ITEC)
LDDC has contributed £400,000 over 3 years for premises and equipment. 72 people were trained in 1986, all of whom found jobs.

(b) Delta Youth Training Scheme and Job Club
LDDC has contributed £60,000, helping to expand capacity from 20 to 50 places. Two thirds of trainees have so far found full-time employment.

(c) Stepney Green Furniture Workshop
LDDC has contributed £135,000, helping to increase capacity from 25 to 70 places. Two thirds of trainees have so far found full-time employment.

(d) Bethnal Green Youth Training Centre
LDDC contributed £3,000 in 1986-87 helping to provide seven places. Those assisted have not yet completed their training.

(e) Shadwell Basin Training Project
LDDC contributed £78,000 in 1986-87 to help in the training of outdoor pursuits instructors. The training is still in progress.

(f) Docklands Community Development Project
LDDC contributed £40,000 in 1986-87. The training is still in progress.

(g) Newham Parents' Centre
LDDC has contributed £110,000 over three years. Of the 77 trainees assisted through the project, 13 have found full-time work, 20 are in part time jobs or other training, and 26 are still being trained.

The corporation has also grant-aided a number of voluntary sector projects with a training element; has assisted various relevant institutions to improve facilities; and through Docklands SKILLnet has this year helped support some 1,100 training places with a variety of training providers.

Statistics on the provision for training made by other agencies are not maintained by the corporation.

Storm Damage

Ms. Ruddock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reimburse the London borough of Lewisham for costs incurred within his area of responsibility, in meeting the emergencies which resulted from the hurricane which hit London on 16 October.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the statement on Wednesday 21 October by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Block Grant

Mr. Barry Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has carried out further estimates of block grant payable to local authorities for 1987-88.

Mr. Howard: The Secretary of State's previous estimates of local authorities' entitlements to block grant were made in May 1987 following approval of the Rate Support Grant Supplementary Report (England) 1987-88. My right hon. Friend exercised his discretion under section 66(1) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, and made further estimates of the amounts of block grant payable on 20 October. He took account of the further information on expenditure or rateable value or both which he had received from 72 authorities on or before 19 October. The authorities concerned have been notified of the new estimates. I expect that revised payments will take effect from 6 November. The total of block grant payable to local authorities is now £8,749 million, £12 million less than the previous amount.

Liverpool (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Liverpool.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend visited Liverpool on 4 August 1987.

In the morning he was given a tour of inner Liverpool, and then had discussions with the former leader of Liverpool city council, Councillor Harry Rimmer, and officials, followed by a press conference.

In the afternoon he toured the Albert dock and held discussions with the chairman and chief officers of Merseyside development corporation.

The Secretary of State then had a meeting with the Archbishop of Liverpool before returning to London after a political engagement.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if squash clubs and other sports facilities will be exempt from the proposals contained in Cmnd. 9714 "Paying for Local Government", and in the subsequent consultation documents issued by his Department.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987, c. 820]: Sports clubs which are charities will continue to be entitled to 50 per cent. relief from non-domestic rates as of right and will be eligible for up to another 50 per cent. at the rating authority's discretion. Other non-profit-making sports clubs will be eligible for 100 per cent. relief at the discretion of the local authority. The cost of mandatory reliefs will be met by the national non-domestic rate pool. The cost of discretionary reliefs will be met 50 per cent. by the pool. Therefore, local authorities should generally be no less inclined to grant reliefs than at present.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to make earlier rate support grant settlements in order to allow local authorities to take earlier decisions on levels of community charge.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his answer, 21 October 1987, c. 820]: Rate support grant will be paid only for years up to and including 1989-90. Thereafter, we propose that revenue support grant should be the main source of Government grant for local services.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Propulsion Reactors

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he is having about the disposal of the Royal Navy's discarded nuclear propulsion reactors; with whom he will be discussing the matter before reaching a decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No decisions have yet been taken on the disposal route for the reactor compartments of decommissioned nuclear submarines. The consultation arrangements will depend upon the route proposed. The spent fuel itself will be disposed of in accordance with existing arrangements.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Violence and Sex (Broadcasting)

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for strengthening the oversight of the portrayal of violence and sex in broadcasting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: We propose to establish a new Broadcasting Standards Council, divorced from programme making, which will act as a focus for public concern about the portrayal of violence and sex on all forms of television and radio receivable in the United Kingdom. Responsibility for enforcing programme standards and for responding to complaints will remain with the broadcasting authorities, but the new council will be able to monitor the relevant programme standards and publicise its findings, where necessary, on individual programmes. It will also be able to initiate studies and research on the relevant programme standards. The new council will not be concerned with complaints about unjust treatment and the invasion of privacy, which are the responsibility of the Broadcasting Complaints Commission. The new council will be able to express general views about the portrayal of sex and violence in video works, but will not duplicate the functions of the British Board of Film Classification.

We intend to put the Broadcasting Standards Council on a statutory footing at the earliest opportunity, but to establish it initially in advance of legislation.

The broadcasting authorities and other interested bodies are being consulted. Further details will be announced in the light of those consultations.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Expenditure

Mr. William Powell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the latest years now available, identifiable public expenditure by function in England, Northern Ireland, Scotland, Wales and the United Kingdom expressed (a) in cash terms, (b) as a percentage of United Kingdom total identifiable public expenditure, (c) as an amount per capita and (d) as an amount per capita expressed as a percentage of the United Kingdom amount per capita.

Mr. Major: The term "identifiable expenditure" refers to expenditure that can be identified from official records as having been incurred in a particular country. Total identifiable expenditure accounts for just over 80 per cent. of total public departmental public expenditure.

The remainder, unidentifiable expenditure, includes expenditure on defence, overseas aid and other overseas services which are deemed to have been incurred on behalf of the United Kingdom as a whole. It also includes Government net lending to, and the market and overseas borrowing of, the public corporations (including nationalised industries), due to the difficulty of allocating this finance to expenditure in a particular country.

Tables 1 to 5 show figures of identifiable public expenditure according to main function in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. These are the only available figures comparing public expenditure by function in four countries of the United Kingdom. The analysis covers 1982-83 to 1986-87, the only period for which data are available on a consistent basis.

Table 6 compares, for the latest year, 1986-87, expenditure in the Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland programmes with the total identifiable expenditure in the respective countries by function. It shows that identifiable expenditure has a wider coverage than expenditure within the responsibility of the Secretaries of State in the case of Scotland and Wales, and, in the case of Northern Ireland, it has a slightly wider coverage than the Northern Ireland programme in the public expenditure survey. This table also shows unidentifiable expenditure by function for 1986-87.

In some cases expenditure which cannot be separately identified for England, Scotland or Wales can be allocated to Great Britain rather than the United Kingdom; for example, the majority of the financng of expenditure by the nationalised industries can be allocated to Great Britain. In these cases it is appropriate to compare Northern Ireland allocated expenditure with that allocated to Great Britain. Tables 7a and 7b provide this analysis over the five year period.

The extent to which expenditure can be identified may vary from year to year and between countries. The coverage of particular functions can also vary between countries: for example, in Northern Ireland, expenditure on arts and libraries is contained in the education category.

The tables use the terms and definitions of the last public expenditure White Paper "The Government Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90" (Cm. 56) but they incorporate later information.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Reform

Mr. Allen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision he proposes to make in the national curriculum for educating young people on their rights to vote; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's proposals for a national curriculum do not include political education as a foundation subject. It may however be taught through the medium of foundation subjects such as history, or among the non-foundation subjects. We are aware of the need to use the national curriculum to help to encourage a sense of social responsibility among young people; this will be drawn to the attention of the working groups which also will advise my right hon. Friend on attainment targets and programmes of study for relevant subjects.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the proposed legislation on charges for certain aspects of state school education.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's recent consultation document on charging for school activities was issued in the light of a number of requests from individuals, local authorities and the local authority associations for clarification of the law. The document was issued on 2 October, requesting comments by 30 November. Fewer than 50 responses have so far been received. Copies of the consultation document are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Andrew Smith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many responses he has received to each of the consultative documents on changes to the education system; what are the figures for each local education authority area; and what are the numbers and percentages of responses broadly for and against each of the proposals.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on 22 October. The information on the numbers of responses from each local education authority area could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The Department is still analysing the many thoughtful responses received to each of the consultation papers; many respondents have commented in some detail and responses could not readily be classified as requested.

Community Education

Mr. Matthew Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy for community education.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend will continue to support community education by encouraging and publicising good and successful practice. We believe that progress in this area is best achieved by local responses to local needs.

Schools (Annual Report)

Mr. Ken Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the outcome of his request to Her Majesty's senior chief inspector of schools to consider a new style of annual report based on the Inspectorate's observations over a full academic year.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Her Majesty's senior chief inspector of schools has set in train preparatory work aimed at developing a new style of annual report which will offer a view of the nature, quality and effectiveness of education in schools and colleges over a whole academic year rather than just one term. The inspectorate's programme for the academic year 1987-88 has of necessity been planned and launched without the benefit of this work. But I have asked the SCI to consider whether it would be possible to publish in 1989 a transitional report covering that academic year. The first full report in the new style will relate to the academic year 1988-89 and I hope to be able to publish it early in 1990.

PRIME MINISTER

DHSS Files (Access)

Miss Mowlam asked the Prime Minister if she will refer to the Security Commission allegations of (a) an improper computer link between the security services and Department of Health and Social Security offices in Newcastle and (b) improper access by security service officers to national insurance files.

The Prime Minister: No.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Prime Minister whether she will require the Civil Service to register with the Equality Exchange established by the Equal Opportunities Commission as an information network for employees, advisors and trainers interested in promoting equal opportunities for women in employment.

The Prime Minister: The equal opportunities division of the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service has registered with the Equality Exchange and circulates useful information to departmental equal opportunity officers. It is a matter for individual Departments to decide whether to register separately with the Equality Exchange.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Staff Training

Mrs. Gillian Shephard asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to improve the training of social services staff.

Mr. Newton: I am glad to be able to announce that we intend to introduce a special training support programme for social services management and staff working with elderly people. This will cover both residential and domiciliary care, including home help organisers. The aim is to improve the quality of care, and the cost-effectiveness of these services.

The programme will involve expenditure of £10 million in 1988-89, of which 70 per cent. will be met by a specific Government grant. Detailed arrangements will be discussed with the local authority associations.

This new measure complements a wide range of other initiatives already under way to improve training in the field of child abuse and the training of social services management generally. We look forward to receiving shortly proposals from the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work for reform in arrangements for the training of all staff in the social services, including the qualifying training for social workers. We are grateful for the considerable work the council has put into preparing its proposals, to which the Government will give careful consideration.

AIDS

Mrs. Gillian Shephard asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what funds are being made available to meet the cost of services for people with AIDS or HIV infection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: In addition to the overall increase of 8·8 per cent. in 1987-88 in allocations to regional health authorities for hospital and community health services as a whole, including needs arising from AIDS and HIV infection, the Government have already made additional allocations totalling £6 million to the three regional health authorities on whom demands arising from AIDS have fallen disproportionately. These are North-West Thames, North-East Thames and South-East Thames. The first of these alone had well over half of all AIDS patients in England at the end of September; the three together accounted for over four out of every five.

We have been keeping the position under careful review, and have decided to make available to these authorities a further £6·5 million in 1987-88 in recognition of the special extra demands placed upon them. North-West Thames will receive £3·9 million; North-East Thames £1·6 million; and South-East Thames £1 million.

We also propose to make available a further £1·1 million in 1987-88 to the Public Health Laboratory Service to meet extra costs arising from HIV testing and monitoring the spread of infection, and a further £200,000 for associated work at the National Institute for Biological Standards and Control.

Benefits

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received advice from the Social Security Advisory Committee on the operation of regulations governing unemployment benefit payments to those regularly engaged in seasonal work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No, but I understand that the Committee will shortly complete its consideration of the operation of the seasonal workers' regulations, and will then report to my right hon. Friend.

Child Care

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many lone parents currently benefit from the provision in the supplementary benefit regulations which allows child care expenses reasonably incurred to be deducted from the calculation of earnings; and if he will supply this information in respect of (a) London north region, (b) London south region, and (c) England and Wales as a whole.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information about the number of lone parents who currently have child care expenses deducted from the calculation of their earnings is not available.

Ms. Abbott asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representation he has received regarding the effects on working lone parents of the provision in the draft income support regulations which does not deduct necessary child care expenses when calculating net earnings; (2) if he will amend the draft income support regulations so as to allow expenses incurred in connection with the care of another member of the family to be deducted from gross earnings where they are reasonably incurred in order to undertake paid work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We have received a small number of representations on this subject. The reforms of the income-related benefits in April 1988 will produce arrangements that are easier to understand and to operate and put the basic rules for the three income-related benefits—income support, family credit and housing benefit — on a common basis. The treatment of work expenses in these three benefits will be in line with those that currently apply in family income supplement and housing benefit, the main income-related benefits for people in work. At the same time we intend to increase to £15 the amount of part-time earnings a lone parent can have without reducing entitlement to income support. We expect many to gain from the simpler rules and higher disregard of earnings. Those who might otherwise receive less help at the point of change will have the level of state support maintained under transitional arrangements.

Disabled People

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to take action on matters within his area of reponsibility raised in the report of the Spastics Society, "Disabled People and the 1987 General Election," a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I have studied the report with interest but the specific issues it raises are primarily the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Cervical Smear Testing (Liverpool)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he received the report of the Liverpool health authority following its investigation into errors in cervical smear testing; what action he is taking to assist those who were the victims of these errors; what plans he has to ensure they will not be repeated in Liverpool or elsewhere; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The report of the independent review into problems arising from cervical cytology screening at The Women's hospital, Liverpool, was received by Liverpool health authority on 22 September 1987. The Department received a copy of the report at the same time.

Liverpool health authority spared no effort in tracing the women affected and provided the staff, equipment and facilities necessary for their care. Special clinics were set up to enable these women to be seen as quickly as possible. Arrangements for counselling women who need further treatment is continuing.

The Department is currently preparing fresh guidance for the National Health Service on cervical cancer screening which includes advice on quality control procedures in cervical cytology laboratories and also fail-safe mechanisms for the follow-up of abnormal smears. The hon. Member will wish to know that the findings of the Liverpool report are being taken into account. The guidance, in the form of a health circular, will become available before the end of the year.

Liverpool Health Authority

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met the chairman of the Liverpool health authority; what subjects were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I met the Chairman of Liverpool health authority, Mr. James Fitzpatrick, in the House on 7 July this year and discussed at length problems arising from cervical cytology screening at The Women's hospital, Liverpool, between March 1983 and December 1985.

Mr. Fitzpatrick was chairman of the independent review into the incident and his review team is to be commended for producing such a thorough report. Its findings are being taken into account in the circular on cervical cancer screening to be published shortly.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources his Department makes available to assist schizophrenia sufferers; what representations he has received about the funding of self-help groups and day centres for schizophrenia sufferers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: A substantial proportion of the £1 billion we will spend this year on mental illness services will be used for the care and treatment of people with schizophrenia.

In addition we expect to spend about £1 million in 1987-88 on continuing research into the care and treatment of mentally ill people, much of which will be relevant to sufferers from schizophrenia; in 1986 we decided also to set aside an extra £0·5 million for six new research studies in mental illness, all including people with schizophrenia and one devoted exclusively to this group; these studies are now getting under way. Earlier the Department funded three action projects specifically aimed at achieving better co-ordination of after-care for sufferers from schizophrenia; the results are now becoming available and will be used to improve co-ordination nationally.

In recent years we have received a few enquiries from voluntary organisations about the availability of central funding for local services provided for sufferers from schizophrenia. We have advised that under section 65 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 applications for funding for local schemes should be made to district health authorities or local authority social service departments. We make a contribution under section 64 of this Act by grant-aiding the central administrative costs of the National Schizophrenia Fellowship (current grant £91,000 per annum) and the Northern Schizophrenia Fellowship and the North West Fellowship (current grants £20,000 per annum each).

Hospital Services

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received expressing concern over the financial position of district health authorities; what plans he has to ensure that such authorities do not reduce essential hospital services; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have received representations from a number of health authorities and hon. Members on health authorities' budgets.

Health authorities are required to operate within their budgets. This entails balancing the cost of increasing activity against other calls on them. It is for health authorities to decide on suitable measures which will enable them to sustain activity with their budgets, without detriment to essential services.

Voluntary Advice Services (Retraining)

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will reconsider his refusal to fund a short-term training team to meet the retraining requirements of the voluntary advice services which have arisen as a result of the changes in the social security system.

Mr. Portillo: The legislative framework within which the Department operates makes no provision for financial assistance to voluntary advice agencies. There are no plans to introduce legislation to change this.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Iran

Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the value of the United Kingdom's exports to, and imports from, Iran in each year since 1979; and if he will give a breakdown of the value of goods and services entering into trade between the two countries during the same period.

Mr. Atkins: The Overseas Trade Statistics records visible trade only. The information available is in the following tables.

Cross-border Mergers

Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the proposals of the European Commission in respect of cross-border mergers.

Mr. Atkins: The European Commission put forward a draft Regulation on the control of concentrations between undertakings (the "Merger Control" Regulation) in 1973. Various amendments have since been made to the text, on which explanatory memoranda have been deposited in the House. The European Commission have asked the Council to reach a decision by the end of November on whether or not to continue discussions on the draft regulation.

US Trade

Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has made to the Government of the United States of America in respect of the likely effects upon British trade of the Common Trade Bill currently before the United States Congress; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are working closely with the European Commission and our Community partners to ensure that the US Administration and Congress are fully aware of the Community's serious concern that a number of provisions in the draft trade legislation currently before the Congress would have a damaging effect on trade, and to emphasise that the Community will act if necessary to safeguard its rights under the GATT.

Llanelli Radiators

Mr. Roger King asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress there has been on Rover Group's plans to dispose of Llanelli Radiators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Austin Rover Group Ltd. announced on 15 October that it had concluded an agreement for a management led employee buy-out of its Llanelli Radiator operation. This follows a decision announced last November (Official Report, 21 November 1986, columns 379-380) to seek a purchaser for the plant.

Following the completion of the sale of Llanelli Radiators the Government will accept no further responsibility for ensuring the obligations of the company are met.

Whale Products

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which fully manufactured goods currently imported into the United Kingdom contain whale products.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 22 October 1987]: Fully manufactured goods are not separately identified in the Overseas Trade Statistics by reference to their containing whale products.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has regarding the number of copies of the book "Spycatcher" imported into the United Kingdom to date.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 22 October 1987]: Figures are not available on the import of individual books.

TRANSPORT

A3 (Hindhead)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make an environmental impact assessment of his proposals for the A3 at Hindhead.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An environmental appraisal was undertaken prior to public consultation. The need for a more detailed assessment and an ecological study will be kept under review.

British Railways Board

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list (a) the members of the British Railways Board, (b) the criteria for selection of members, (c) the relevant qualifications of present members, (d) the number of Trades Union Congress-nominated places and (e) how many trades Union Congress-nominated places are held by women.

Mr. David Mitchell: The names of the 13 current members of the British Railways Board are set out in its annual report and accounts for 1986-87, a copy of which was laid before the House. The criteria for appointment are set out in section 1(3) of the Transport Act 1962. The five full-time executive members, including the chairman, are all career railwaymen. The eight part-time non-executive members, of whom two are women, come from a wide variety of business and commercial backgrounds.

Appointments are made by my right hon. Friend after consultation with the Chairman. No organisation or individual has the right to nominate candidates, though suggestions are always considered carefully.

Stansted Airport

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to encourage the greater use of Stansted airport by charter flight operators.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has no specific proposals in mind; the 1985 White Paper "Airports Policy" (Cmnd 9542) described how the development of Stansted airport would be needed to meet the estimated demand on the London airports system. The rate of growth of Stansted and which airlines will use it are primarily matters for the civil aviation market itself to determine.

Settle-Carlisle Line

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to announce his decision on the future of the Settle—Carlisle line.

Mr. David Mitchell: Shortly.

Railways

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will tabulate such information as is available to him as to the revenue turnover of each of the national railway systems of the Member States of the European Economic Community in either pound sterling equivalents, or ecu, together with the related sum derived from all public funds and its percentage of costs together with the equivalent figures for capital investment.

Mr. David Mitchell: The most recent information available to my Department on the revenues, costs and public subsidy levels of the European Community's railway systems is contained in the Eighth Commission report on the transposed annual accounts of railway undertakings for 1984, (COM(87) 311 final), a copy of which is in the Library of the House. There are substantial variations between countries in accounting systems and in the arrangements for financial support, and the figures contained in the report only provide a broad comparison. We have no equivalent figures for capital investment.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will tabulate for each financial year from 1982-83 the total revenue support for the British Railways Board in both actual sums and at 1987 prices.

Mr. David Mitchell: The figures for Government support for the British Railways Board taken from the final claims for grant in compensation for the public service obligation under EEC Regulation 1191/69 and section 3 of the Railways Act 1974 and for level crossings grant under EC Regulation 1192/69 from 1982 to 1986-87 are given below; 1984-85 is a 15-month period reflecting a change in the British Railways Board financial year. The figures for 1985-86 and 1986-87 remain provisional; final claims have not yet been agreed. The following table also includes payments by the passenger transport executives under section 20(4) of the Transport Act 1968, as reported in the British Railways Board annual report and accounts.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate is available to him of the reduction in rail fares required to bring about a switch of passenger traffic of 2, 5 and 10 per cent., respectively, from road to rail; and what estimate he has of the respective increases required in Exchequer support for British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: There are in general no reliable estimates available of changes of this magnitude. The effect would vary widely from area to area depending on rail market share and other factors.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been (a) made by his Department and (b) submitted to his Department by British Rail as part of the Channel tunnel construction programme of the cost of improvements to the London-to-Dover main line needed to permit a 150 m.p.h. maximum speed over its straight sections; and if he will make it his policy to authorise the necessary expenditure.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have asked the British Railways Board to carry out by next June a study of the best way of improving capacity and service quality, including speed, on the route between London and the Channel tunnel for both domestic and international traffic. The study will include estimates of cost.

We expect the board's investments in connection with the Channel tunnel to meet the usual criteria for investment in their commercial sectors.

Buses

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what restrictions or conditions he or London Regional Transport places on the disposal of garage accommodation transferred to contractors to London Regional Transport or to subsidiaries of London Buses Limited.

Mr. David Mitchell: LRT retain their property interests until they are no longer required for operational purposes when they are disposed of by LRT at best market value.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what form of primary or secondary legislation he expects to place before Parliament in order to implement his proposals for the deregulation of stage carriage services within the area of London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: The licensing of local bus services in London can be abolished by Order subject to affirmative resolution under section 46 of the Transport Act 1985. I am considering whether any additional measures might be desirable.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what additional tests, or other examinations, including those of health, are applied to holders of public service vehicle licences by (a) London Buses Ltd., (b) subsidiaries of London Buses Ltd. and (c) other contractors to London Regional Transport, respectively; and if he will make a statement concerning his policy for maintaining standards of bus driving in the London area.

Mr. David Mitchell: In order to qualify for a PSV driver's licence applicants must demonstrate their competence by passing a stringent driving test and must satisfy the statutorily independent traffic commissioners as to their physical and mental fitness and good character before a licence is issued. This is a standard requirement for all operators. Other recruitment standards and tests are matters for bus operators themselves.

London City Airport

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will request the Civil Aviation Authority to postpone authorising commercial flights to and from London City airport until initial safety exercises have taken place involving airport safety teams and local fire, ambulance and police services.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Civil aviation safety regulation is wholly the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. I understand from the authority that arrangements at London City airport satisfy the authority's requirements for the grant of an aerodrome licence for public transport.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmon

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports he has received from water authorities in England and Wales about the incidence of salmon poaching since the passing of the Salmon Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: We are in regular contact with the water authorities on a range of issues concerning the enforcement of salmon and freshwater fisheries law. The most-up-to-date statistics available on poaching are for 1986, during which year water authorities mounted a total of 781 prosecutions for offences concerning salmon and migratory trout. When the new measures introduced by the Salmon Act 1986 have been in force long enough to permit an assessment of their impact, it is our intention to invite the Salmon Advisory Committee to examine their effectiveness.

SCOTLAND

Inshore Fishing

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland, Official Report, 21 July, column 127, he will state what recent discussions there have been between Her Majesty's Government and officials of the European Commission on the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Carriage of Monofilament Gill Nets) (Scotland) Order 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There have been no such discussions on this matter since August 1986.

Forestry

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is now in a position to respond to the Nature Conservancy Council's report "Nature Conservation and Afforestation in Britain".

Mr. Rifkind: I have sent the following letter, setting out the Government's views, to the NCC's chairman, Mr. William Wilkinson.

"Dear Mr. Wilkinson,

1. I am writing to let you have the Government's considered response to the recommendations contained in your report "Nature Conservation and Afforestation in Britain".

2. We are indebted to you for producing this comprehensive, clear and helpful view of the interaction between forestry and nature conservation. We particularly welcome the importance attached throughout the report to the need for balance in addressing the issues raised. Forestry and nature conservation have important roles to play in the development of the countryside and it is the Government's policy that forestry should take place in ways that are compatible with other land use interests, including nature conservation.

Forestry policy

3. Your report has come at a time when rural areas in Britain are facing important changes as a result of the need to tackle agricultural surpluses within the EEC. Along with other reports on the future of the countryside, it was a useful contribution in our consideration of policies for the rural economy and environment which resulted in the publication "Farming and Rural Enterprise". Our conclusions on the positive role that forestry has to play as an alternative use for agricultural land were outlined in the document "Farming UK" which formed part of that publication. We propose an expansion of the traditional forestry programme—to 33,000 hectares a year — with due regard being paid to environmental considerations. We shall also be encouraging the planting of an increased proportion of trees on low ground of better quality.

4. I hope you will welcome this new emphasis which should offer opportunities for landscape and habitat diversity, including a greater use of broadleaves. We also expect broadleaved woodlands to feature strongly in our new scheme to encourage the development of farm woodlands.

5. In the context of encouraging farmers to plant trees, your report suggested that a review of the present tax incentives for forestry should be carried out. We have taken careful note of what you have to say in this regard. Since your views were published, however, the Public Accounts Committee has reported on a review by the Comptroller and Auditor General on the objectives and achievements of the Forestry Commission which also touches on the question of fiscal incentives for private forestry. We shall be responding to the Committee's report very shortly. I am sure you will understand, therefore, that I cannot comment on the point about forestry taxation at this stage.

SSSIs

6. We welcome and support the continuing co-operation between the Forestry Commission and the Nature Conservancy Council on the management of the large number of SSSIs on Commission land, as evidenced by the Declaration of Intent signed by both bodies in 1986. We share your concern that SSSIs should, within the terms of the 1981 Act, be protected from damaging operations. I am pleased to note from your report that only one SSSI has in fact been damaged by forestry, and that, I understand, was accidental. I do not believe it would be reasonable, therefore, to put an absolute ban on planting within SSSIs. Unlike the case of NNRs, nature conservation is not the primary land use within SSSIs and the right course is to consider each case on its merits. I very much hope that there will continue to be the closest co-operation between your Council and the Forestry Commission to resolve cases where a balance had to be struck between nature conservation and other interests, with cases being referred to Ministers where this does not prove to be possible.

Controlling afforestation

7. As regards methods for ensuring that forestry developments take place in harmony with nature conservation, we do of course have well-established guidelines and mechanisms in place. There is already a strong commitment to conservation on the part of the Forestry Commission—both in its own operations and in its handling of private sector proposals—and it has sought over the years to adopt a balanced and flexible approach in considering each new issue as it arises. The Commission is required to consult, as appropriate, with the Agriculture Departments, local planning authorities and other statutory authorities on applications for grant-aid or felling licences and on draft plans of operations containing planting and felling proposals. The Nature Conservancy Council is consulted whenever a proposal falls wholly or partly within a National Nature Reserve, an SSSI or an area formally proposed for such designation to ensure that conservation factors are fully considered. Special arrangements for consultations on forestry proposals within Environmentally Sensitive Areas have also been introduced after discussion between the Forestry Commission and your Council. To take a recent example, because of the importance which your Council attaches to the flow country of Caithness and Sutherland, the Forestry Commission has further extended its formal consultations with you to embrace all applications for grant aid in these two districts to allow time for the nature conservation interest to be defined more clearly, and I am now giving careful consideration to the proposals you have made in that regard in your report 'Birds, Bogs and Forestry'. Local authorities are also encouraged to consult widely, for example with voluntary conservation groups.

8. Under the terms of a Ministerial Direction, where objections are raised which cannot be resolved, the application has to be referred to the Commission's Regional Advisory Committee, which makes further efforts to find a solution acceptable to all the parties; as you know, ways of widening the representation of non-forestry interest on these Committees and of making them more publicly accountable have been the subject of a review by the Forestry Commission, and I hope that an announcement can be made reasonably soon. It is also important to bear in mind that where an authority consulted under these procedures maintains its objections to an application beyond the Regional Advisory Committee stage, the Forestry Commission may over-ride them only with the endorsement of Ministers. There are therefore important safeguards for the environment built into the present procedures.

Planting licences

9. Your report proposes the introduction of a system of planting licences to strengthen the existing controls which operate through the forestry grant schemes. As I have said above, however, we consider that the present procedures have generally proved to be an effective form of control. That the private sector supports this voluntary approach is evidenced by its remarkably good record over the years; there have been very few instances where the consultation procedures have been side-stepped and the grant forgone. The Government therefore considers that there is insufficient evidence to suggest a need for the existing arrangements to be supplemented by statutory controls such as planting licensing, although this will be kept under review.

The wider countryside

10. There has been an important shift of emphasis on the part of the Forestry Commission in recent years in response to changing perceptions on environmental matters, including nature conservation, and in the light of advice it has received from the Nature Conservation Council and other statutory authorities such as the Countryside Commissions. The statutory remit of the Forestry Commissioners has been extended to include a duty to endeavour to achieve a reasonable balance between timber production and the environment. That is not to suggest that the pursuit of this new duty will necessarily avoid conflicts of interest in every instance, but the Government believes that such conflicts will be reduced as the Forestry Commission's policies and practices develop. In this connection, I was pleased to learn that discussions have begun between the Forestry Commission and yourselves aimed at the provision of constructive advice on nature conservation issues in the wider countryside. Such a move can only be to the benefit of rural development and, with goodwill and a realistic approach on both sides, should lead to a better mutual understanding.

Return on investment in new planting

11. Your report placed some stress on the need to determine criteria for estimating an acceptable return on timber production, both for the Forestry Commission's own planting and as a qualifying threshold for grant-aid. It also suggested that the grant-aid function should be used as a regulator to achieve a reasonable balance between afforestation and other land uses in any county or district. Taking this last point first, the Government takes the view that the best method of achieving an acceptable balance between forestry and conservation, and of taking account of other legitimate land-use interests, is through the present consultation system rather than by means of regulation. The current conditions for grant-aid involve the careful examination of applications to ensure, as far as practicable, that proposals are sensibly drawn on nature conservation, land use and landscape ground before the consultation process is begun. The Forestry Commission is also required to satisfy itself that the proposed planting scheme is silviculturally suited to the site and will produce a utilisable crop of timber. Market forces also infuence the choice of species, and the main requirement for the wood-processing industry is for softwood. There is no evidence that setting a financial rate of return would in general help to safeguard nature conservation interests. It could, for example, militate against the use of broadleaves in many circumstances since these produce a lower return on all but the most fertile lowland sites. The Government would not therefore wish to stipulate acceptable rates of return which are, and should remain, matters to be determined by those investing in forestry.

12. As far as the Forestry Commission's own planting is concerned, a financial return on investment is calculated for each site taking into account such factors as soil and site characteristics and the species to be planted. However, this is only part of the evaluation process. Other factors have also to be considered, including employment, effective integration with agriculture, environmental safeguards and, where appropriate, opportunities for public access and recreation.

Increased planting of better agricultural land

13. Your report recommends a closer inter-relationship between forestry and agriculture, and the planting of enclosed agricultural land. This is in line with the Government's report "Farming UK", which confirmed our commitment to increasing the proportion of planting which takes place on low ground of better quality than hitherto. In addition, the consultation paper on the Farm Woodland Scheme proposed measures which should increase planting on agricultral land. In recent years, most planting has taken place in Scotland, and last year I announced changes in the criteria for the approval of agricultural land for forestry which are already providing new opportunities for planting, including, in certain circumstances, planting on enclosed agricultural land. There are few agricultural restrictions on new planting in England and Wales. The Forestry Commission will also keep in mind the need to encourage planting on better quality land in their regular reviews of grant rates.

Design and management of forestry schemes

14. I note that the report is deeply critical of "blanket" afforestation; however, we believe that there can be scope for large-scale afforestation, provided that a balance is reached with other relevant land use interests. New planting—on whatever scale—should continue to reflect the economic, landscape and nature conservation needs of the locality, and we agree entirely with you that appropriate design and management practices should be adopted in all forestry schemes. Applicants for grant aid are required to provide sufficient information in the draft plan of operations, which forms part of the application, to determine whether a reasonable balance can be achieved with other land use interests. This draft plan is sent to the appropriate statutory authorities for comment under mutually agreed arrangements, and those authorities are encouraged to give copies to, and seek views from, local interests including voluntary conservation bodies. Because the plan of operations prepared under the present system should take account of conservation factors where appropriate, we do not feel it is necessary to adopt your suggestion for a separate conservation plan.

15. We are certainly in total agreement when it comes to the need to develop and adopt silvicultural practices which minimise the adverse impacts of forestry on the environment. I know that the Forestry Commission has devoted considerable effort to this over the years. For example, the techniques of ploughing have been developed to minimise soil erosion; planting well back from stream-sides has also been promoted as good practice for some time, as has the avoidance of fertiliser run-off and the minimum use of pesticides.

Increasing the nature conservation value of forests

16. The Government fully endorses the suggestion that the Forestry Commission should continue its efforts to maximise benefits for wildlife within existing forests. To this end conservation plans have been drawn up for all Commission forests with the help and assistance of a wide range of voluntary and statutory conservation organisations, including the Nature Conservancy Council. The recommendation in your report for establishing experimental conservation areas could be useful in both a research and a demonstration sense, although the Forestry Commission intends to apply good conservation practice to all its forests.

17. While changes in attitude and approach towards conservation will be reflected in new planting where measures are considered from the inception of a scheme, because of the long-term nature of the industry it will take some time for dramatic changes to be seen in existing forests. Opportunities for diversification and modification will occur, however, when felling commences, and advantage can be taken at the time of subsequent restocking to introduce positive conservation measures.

Research

18. I am pleased to record that the research activities recommended in the report are being covered by the Forestry Commission's wildlife conservation research studies. I am also glad to learn that joint programmes of research between the Commission and the Nature Conservancy Council have been started and that opportunities will be sought to do more. Your Council's membership of the Forestry Research Co-ordination Committee, which we established in 1982, gives you the opportunity to comment on the Commission's research programmes, to the mutual benefit of both bodies. We commend such co-operation and look to its continuing development.

Training

19. The Government fully endorses the suggestion that opportunities should be taken for forestry staff in the public and private sectors to receive training on management for nature conservation. I understand that the Forestry Commission has already run courses with help and advice from the Nature Conservancy Council.

Conclusion

20. May I conclude by expressing once again the Government's gratitude for the helpful suggestions in your report. These have provided us with a timely and important contribution to the debate on the role of forestry in the countryside. It is appropriate that I should have directed my last remarks to the subject of training since this is of crucial importance if we are to continue to build upon the progress already made in protecting our natural heritage. I know that you have this question of education and the promotion of a more positive attitude to nature conservation very much in mind, and I would like to assure you that the Government supports most warmly all constructive attempts to achieve this very desirable objective."

Electricity

Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the external financing limit for the South of Scotland electricity board in the current financial year.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend proposes to make the following change to the external financing limit of the South of Scotland Electricity Board in 1987-88 :

	£million
Previous limit	84
Revised limit	125
Change	41

The increase in the limit reflects the board's requirement for additional borrowing to cover higher than expected nuclear costs falling within the current year.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, by area, the numbers of additional staff recruited by the Manpower Services Commission in order to administer the jobs training scheme.

Mr. Cope: No additional staff were recruited by the Manpower Services Commission to administer the new job training scheme.

New Towns

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the levels of unemployment in each of the new town development corporation areas in (a) 1970, (b) 1975, (c) 1980 and (d) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information. Unemployment statistics for these areas are derived from the ward-based system and are available only since June 1983. The table therefore shows for June 1983 and the latest date for which figures are available, the numbers of unemployed claimants in the local authority wards which most closely correspond to new town development corporation areas. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986.

New town development corporation areas	Unemployed claimants 9 June 1983	Unemployed claimants 10 September 1987
Milton Keynes	6,841	5,750
Telford	9,413	8,055
Aycliffe and Peterlee	12,761	12,386
Cwmbran	3,022	2,865
Peterborough	7,918	6,888
Washington	4,333	4,266

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average remuneration of panel members of industrial tribunals in (a) 1977, (b) 1982 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: Lay members of industrial tribunals are paid on a sessional basis and their remuneration reflects the number of sessions that they sit. Members are expected to sit once every three weeks. The information on average payments is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The fees per session paid to members were £20 in 1977, £43 in 1987 and £67 for the year ending 31 March 1987.

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for Employment what were the salaries paid to (a) the permanent chairman and (b) the part-time chairmen of industrial tribunals in (i) 1977, (ii) 1982 and (iii) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: Regional chairmen of industrial tribunals were paid a salary of £12,500 in 1977, £22,750 in 1982 and £41,500 as at 31 March 1987. The comparable figures for full-time chairmen of industrial tribunals were £11,750, £20,750 and £31,850 respectively, excluding London weighting. Part-time chairmen were paid fees of £45 per session day in 1977, £94 in 1982 and £145 in 1987, excluding London weighting.

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total amount of compensation paid to claimants by industrial tribunals in (a) 1977, (b) 1982 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: Figures for 1977 and 1982 are not available. The total amount of compensation awarded in unfair dismissal, sex and race discrimination and equal opportunity cases for the 12 months ending 31 March 1987 was £5,125,573.

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of successful claimants in industrial tribunals were reinstated to their jobs in (a) 1977, (b) 1982 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The proportion of successful applicants in unfair dismissal cases who were reinstated or re-engaged was 4·5 per cent. in 1977, 3·8 per cent. in 1982 and 4·5 per cent. in the 12 months ending 31 March 1987.

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average amount of compensation paid to successful claimants in industrial tribunals in (a) 1977, (b) 1982 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The median award in unfair dismissal cases was £350 in 1977, £1,201 in 1982 and £1,805 for the 12 months ending 31 March 1987.

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of applicants to industrial tribunals had their cases upheld in (a) 1977, (b) 1982 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: Of those claiming unfair dismissal the figures were 30·8 per cent. in 1977, 30·7 per cent. in 1982 and 33·7 per cent. for the year ending 31 March 1987. For all jurisdictions for the period ending 31 March 1987 the figure was 40·7 per cent. Figures for all jurisdictions are not available for 1977 and 1982.

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases were heard by industrial tribunals in (a) 1977, (b) 1982 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: 18,962 in 1977, 16,602 in 1982 and 13,124 for the 12 months ending 31 March 1987.

Mr. Grocott asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total cost of administering (a) the industrial tribunals and (b) the employment appeal tribunal in (i) 1977, (ii) 1982 and (iii) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: £4,541,000 and £184,000 respectively for the 12 months ending 31 March 1977; £8,830,000 and £452,000 for the 12 months ending 31 March 1982; and £12,913,658 and £723,069 for the 12 months ending 31 March 1987. The 1977 and 1982 figures exclude accommodation and associated services which were borne by the Property Services Agency. In the case of the Employment Appeal Tribunal the figures also exclude judicial salaries which are borne by the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is (a) the proportion of working time allocated to his departmental equal opportunities officer for equal opportunities duties, (b) the other duties carried out by the departmental equal opportunities officer, (c) the proportion, and the amount of the departmental budget allocated to equal opportunities work, (d) the number of occasions when the departmental equal opportunities officer meets equal opportunities officers from other Government Departments each year, (e) the guidelines issued to departmental training officers and equal opportunities officers to promote the use of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act and (f) what action has been taken to facilitate job share, part-time working and parental leave.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is as follows:

(a) 20 per cent. (but the five sectors within the DE Group also have equal opportunities officers); (b) personnel policy, including recruitment, promotion, management development and terms and conditions of employment; (c) the information is not available because it cannot be separated from personnel and training costs; (d) about four times a year at meetings run by the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service; (e) general advice is given in our personnel handbook. Demand for single sex training is met by Civil Service College courses and DE HQ workshops; (f) a policy agreed with the Trade Unions to increase opportunities for part-time work, including job-sharing, has been widely publicised and implemented successfully. Applications for special leave for childcare, maternity etc. are dealt with sympathetically and quickly.

Restart

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons nationally and in each region, have been selected for interview under the restart programme in each month since the programme started, and cumulatively up to the latest date; and of these how many had their benefit stopped; how many were placed in a job; how many were placed in a training scheme or programme; and what percentage each of these represents of the total number selected for interview.

Mr. Fowler: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Tourism

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Employment what support from public funds is received by the British Tourist Authority and the regional tourist boards; and what plans he had to review this.

Mr. Nicholls: Support from public funds in the current financial year is as follows:

— Grant-in-Aid to the British Tourist Authority £21·4 million.

— Grant-in-Aid to the English Tourist Board £23·3 million including £12·0 million for the scheme of assistance ot tourism projects operated under Section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969.

Subventions to the English regional tourist boards by the English tourist board from its grant-in-aid will amount to £2·7 million. The board will make further funds available to the regiona! tourist boards for specific marketing projects. The regional tourist boards also receive funding from local authorities.

Government funding for the British tourist authority and the English tourist board is reviewed annually as part of the public expenditure survey. Allocations for 1988-89 are currently being determined as part of this review.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 120

SESSION 1987–88

20th July–23rd October 1987

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
